"In keeping with the religious spirit that prompts your presence here this evening, I have chosen the topic 'Christian chivalry' for this sermon. Knighthood of old upheld the dignity of manhood and as champions of womanhood guarded the shrine of human love from vulgarity and vice. Knighthood of which you are representatives is the champion of Christian principles defending the cause of the Eternal Son of God. The trend of thought in this our day of astounding human progress is directed in matters religious not so much by what men say as by the influence of what men do. Champions of the noblest cause that ever moved human energy to action, you have entered the arena of human influence to cast the weight of your example in the scale of Christian progress. Your leader, in whose principles you hope to follow, is none less than the King of kings, whose manhood exemplified in His Eternal Son is the inspiration of your living. In your fellowship of knighthood the practical character of your faith demands that you give a reason for the moral helps and restrictions in your living. Yours it is to give proof to an inquiring world that your knighthood excels not only in ideal, but in fact the boasted knighthood of the ages long gone by. So let your life be that both in State and church it will reflect the standard of Christian prudence and God-like energy for the betterment of your fellowmen. It is this that must foster, sustain and perfect the individual and the community, the Church and the State. If you are to preserve and increase your rich inheritance and hasten the coming of the Kingdom of God in yourselves and the world around you."

MENACING FOREST FIRES

Blazes on Watchung Mountains and in the Washington Valley.

BIG PROPERTIES THREATENED.

The Rainfall at Midnight Stayed the Progress of the Devastating Fires.

Forest fires in Washington valley and on the slopes of the Watchung mountains have been terrorizing residents of that section for the past few days. It was not until last night, however, that the flames assumed a threatening attitude, but the rainfall at midnight came to the rescue and extinguished the fires.

Borough Clerk Frederick A. Martin was given a big scare last night when the flames reached a distance of about 300 from his bungalow near Johnson's drive. Situated near this point are also the bungalows of Louis D. Hyde and L. M. French. Luckily there was only a light breeze blowing from the east or else considerable damage would have resulted.

In anticipation of trouble Borough Clerk Martin slept in his bungalow last night. At 11 o'clock he was awakened by the smell of smoke which was evidence that the fire was eating its way close to his property. Mr. Martin's fears, however, were wiped out when it started to rain and it was only a short time before the progress of the flames were halted.

The fire also raged in the vicinity of Mt. St. Mary's college and back of Scotch Plains. The district surrounding Mt. Bethel and Berkeley Heights but property escaped any damage. The Grossman school was threatened for a time on Saturday afternoon.

The fires had been burning since Wednesday and are invariably due to small boys who have been building small bonfires among the dried leaves and branches.

TOOL THIEF TO BE BROUGHT TO UNION CO.

Albert Jerome Fields, the notorious tool and brass journal thief, who was arrested last week at South Plainfield by Special Officer Metzheiser, is being detained at Jefferson Market Police Court, New York, pending requisition papers from Union county, where he is wanted.

It is believed that this action will prevent the return of much valuable booty which Fields has knowledge of in various parts of the country. It is largely through the influence of Chief Kiely that Fields is being held in New York, and it is said that he is interested in his prosecution in this county.

MORRIS D. SHANNON, HAS PASSED AWAY

Morris D. Shannon, one of the best known residents in the west end died at his home on West Third street yesterday. Mr. Shannon was a native of Ireland and a resident of this city for forty-two years. He was a tailor by trade and for a period of twenty-two years he was an employe of the C. Schefyplin, manufacturers of clothing on West Front street.

Mr. Shannon is survived by a wife and five children, two daughters and three sons. The daughters are the Misses Margaret and Catharne, and the sons, William, Clinton and Harry Shannon. The funeral services will be conducted tomorrow morning, at 8:30 o'clock from the house, and at 9 o'clock at St. Mary's church.

Miss Maya Das to Speak Here.

Miss Maya Das, who will speak at the Wednesday night meeting at the First Baptist church, was born near Lahore, India. Her father was head of one of the departments of Civil Council, and she is from one of the high-class Indian families. She was graduated last June from Mt. Holyoke College and is now taking a course of study at the National Training School for Y. W. C. A. work in her native country.

Lecture on "Palestine."

Rev. Dr. C. E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, will deliver his first illustrated lecture on "Palestine," at the church, tomorrow night. A silver offering will be received to be devoted to the Men's club for the publication of the calendar.

SCHOOL BOY MINSTRELSY

P. H. S. Pupils Appear as Burnt Cork Artists Before Big Audience.

THE SHOW A GOOD ONE.

Topical Songs, Hits and Sketches All Effective—The Coach Is Given a Present.

An enthusiastic and thoroughly appreciative audience attended the minstrel show given at the Plainfield High School, Saturday night, by the pupils for the benefit of the athletic association fund. The entertainment opened with a chorus, "In the Evening by the Moonlight," after which the curtains were drawn showing the minstrel troupe in gorgeous array.

The show was considered the best ever given at the school. There was an abundance of real good musical numbers, the songs, soloist work and chorus being perfect, while the jokesmith was evidently working overtime, for the jokes were above the average.

Roy Titsworth made a capital interlocutor, as a soloist he came in for plenty of applause in the rendition of several popular songs. The solo work of James Mauger and Ernest Van Zandt was also well received. The big hit of the show was the singing of the topical song, "Comparisons," composed by Alden E. Moore and sung by Jack Rifferts. It was received with great enthusiasm as the gentle "knocks" were handed out to the Board of Education, as well as the pupils.

At the close of the first part, S. B. Howe, Jr., was presented with several handsomely bound volumes of "Contemporary History." Roy Titsworth made the presentation, and Mr. Howe made a brief response.

Miss Elsie Knowlton was at the piano, and her work was entirely satisfactory. She was presented with a bouquet of American Beauty roses. Part two comprised specialties, songs, and comedy sketches. The P. H. S. S. quartet made a hit with its songs. Ramsey and Sewall were down on the program for a side-splitting musical farce, "Romeo and Juliet," and it was fine. Charles R. Bostwick gave an excellent exhibition of club and torch swinging. "Can You Beat the Dutch," a one-act musical comedy in which Doane and Rifferts appeared, scored a big hit. It was one of the best features of an exceptionally good show.

The candy tables were in charge of Miss Madeline Durrar, Miss Frances Newell, Miss Margaret Hutchinson and Miss Annie Johnson and the entire supply was sold out early.

ANTHONY PHILLIPS' STORE AT SOUTH PLAINFIELD ROBBED.

Burglars effected an entrance to Anthony Phillips' candy and cigar store at South Plainfield, Friday night, and got away with a quantity of tobacco and candy and about $3 in small change. The robbery is believed to be the work of two young fellows, who were seen hanging about the place on Friday, in company with a negro.

Phillips says that the two strangers visited his store during the day begging. He gave them a coat and some change, and it is his opinion that they returned late that night and burglarized his store. There is little chance of capturing the guilty parties.

BRASS JOURNAL THIEF IS TAKEN TO NEWARK.

Frank Brittimus, who was arrested at South Plainfield on Friday on suspicion, was taken to Newark, Saturday, where he is wanted for wholesale brass journal thieving.

The man is said to have taken booty aggregating many thousands of dollars in value from the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and it was because of the fact that the company wanted him that he was taken to Newark, where he is now being held at the resquest of the company.

Miss Cora Burns Entertains.

Miss Martha Case, of Flemington, has returned home after a visit with Miss Cora Burns, of North avenue. Miss Burns gave a dinner Saturday night in honor of Miss Case, covers being laid for six. Among those present were Miss Lillian Teeter, Miss Marie Schafer, Miss Martha Case and Miss Cora Burns. Afterward the guests attended the P. H. S. minstrel show at the high school.

Reported Attempted Assault.

Alfred Luery, of 415 Grant avenue, complained to the police last night at 9:15 that a maid in his employ had been followed home from church and attacked almost in front of his door. The maid's screams brought assistance and when others appeared he made good his escape. The woman could give no good description of the man.

DISCHARGED WITH WARNING; GANG IS LUCKY

The case of the assault on the Greek bootblacks on the corner of West Front street and Somerset, which occurred Saturday night, November 6, came up before City Judge Runyon this morning and for lack of direct evidence of the actual happenings on the night in question the whole gang was allowed to go. But not without a warning. Two of the young men have been before the court before on similar charges but their actions on the night in question were so skillfully hidden by the rest of the men that Judge Runyon was unable to fasten anything on them. The warning, however, will undoubtedly act as a deterrent for the future, as the court promises to make it decidedly uncomfortable for them if they are again brought before him.

The cause of the original trouble was the upsetting of a pail of water with which the Greeks were cleaning out their bootblack stand on the night in question. According to the stories of the men in court this morning the individual who kicked over the pail was not present but his name was given as "Edmondson." Joe Monahan said he saw the Greek approaching him with a knife in his hand and didn't care to take a chance of going to the hospital, so took one of going to jail instead by slugging the Greek. Thomas Linus, who was arrested by Patrolman Nolan on the night of the fracas, was apparently exhonorated by the testimony of the other men.

WILL NEW MARKET BE IN DARKNESS?

New Market citizens are in a quandary how the village will be lighted after November 30. The appropriation for electric light purposes will be depleted when the bill for this month is paid, and as Township Attorney William A. Coddington, has handed down a legal opinion that the appropriation cannot be increased at a special election, the village is therefore doomed to go without electric lights after this month, it is said.

The present predicament in which the village finds itself in is directly due to a petty squabble last June, when the present light commission was elected and an appropriation of $250 voted. Until this year the appropriation had been fixed at $700, which was just about sufficient to pay for the thirty-two lights now in commission.

Although the appropriation was cut more than half the commissions did not reduce the number of lights, instead, they decided to furnish light on the old scale as long as the funds lasted. With the payment of this month's bill the treasury will be empty, and the only alternative citizens of the village have to a continuance of electric lighting service is to raise the necessary funds by subscription, and an election, or additional appropriations be made, will be illegal until next June, the date set for the annual election of lighting commissioners.

Efforts are now being made by some of the dissatisfied citizens to establish two lighting districts, one on the north side of the Lehigh Valley tracks and one on the south side of the tracks. Soon as a majority of the citizens realized that electric lights would be eliminated after November 30, steps were taken by several citizens on the north side of the track to establish two separate districts, but the plan met with strong opposition when it was placed before the township committee. F. P. Vail, C. E. Kelly and Dr. Nelson are the leaders in the movement to secure two districts, while the scheme is being opposed by former Assemblyman vonMinden, John Evans and John I. Nelson.

The Son of God Recital.

A large congregation representing almost every church in Plainfield gathered in Association Hall last evening at the unusual hour of 9:15 o'clock to hear Bradford Williams recite the story of the Gospel. He began by calling attention to the fact that the Christ represented the "fullness of the Godhead bodily." He laid particular emphasis on the fact that Christ, while a perfect man, was also perfect as to his deity. Mr. Williams quoted a number of passages from both the Old and New Testaments to show according to Paul "that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself."

Local Y. M. C. A. Report.

Secretary Parker's report of the work of the Y. M. C. A. which was read in all the churches yesterday morning is an interesting document and is well worth perusal by those who did not hear it. The Daily Press will print the report in full tomorrow.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES

In All Protestant Churches, Y. M. C. A. Celebrations are Held.

THE WORK WAS EXPLAINED.

Encouraging Addresses Are Made by Men Prominent in the Work—The Annual Report.

Services commemorative of the forty-second anniversary of the Plainfield Young Men's Christian Association were inaugurated yesterday in the local churches, when special association speakers occupied the various pulpits presenting the work. The local association was organized November 18, 1867, and since that time has been a power for good in the community and made steady progress along religious, educational and physical lines.

The pulpit at the First Baptist church, yesterday morning, was occupied by Louis E. Hawkins, State secretary of the Y. M. C. A. He gave a masterly address, his subject pertaining wholly to the spiritual, educational and physical development of man. He said that men's clubs are all right and doubtless fill a need, but they cannot take the place of the association which is engaged in a distinctive work. He said that there are three kinds of men, the movable, immovable and the kind that move, or do things. That is the class of which the association is comprised. His talk was listened to with close attention throughout.

At the Park Avenue Baptist church yesterday morning, B. C. Pond, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., of Paterson, spoke to a large audience. He took for his text Mark 6:30:44: "Give Ye Them to Eat," and he said that Jesus recognized physical needs and He worked through men. The Y. M. C. A. is a co-operative enterprise of Christian churches which recognizes the multiform needs of men and places human resources at the disposal of Jesus Christ to meet this need.

An organization in harmony with this age's passion for efficiency and economy. He exemplified in some well chosen terms this Christian cooperation and showed how the Y. M. C. A. was a pioneer in inter-denominational activities with many worthy followers. He showed it to be an organization with a definite spiritual aim which recognizes the fact of the unity of man and the importance of helping body and mind as well as the spirit. "All of man for all of life." It is an organization which has met success, because of its fundamental loyalty to the church and its agreement as to the essentials of belief.

It is an organization which merits the interest, influence and support of well meaning men, because of what it has done and does do. He also emphasized the need men have for the church and the church for men.

Rev. Dr. Herbert Welch, president of Ohio Wesleyan University, spoke in behalf of the organization in the First Methodist church. His sermon was an eloquent appeal to the church to claim the interests and meet the needs of the young men of the city. He took for his text: "Is the young man, Absalom, safe?" Dr. Welch said among other things that there is altogether too prevalent a motion that religion and the church are for women and children, but not for strong men. Jesus Christ if He be King, must have these strong men to rule over.

To save an old man tottering into the grave is a startling work, but to save a young man means something to the work of God's Kingdom in this world as well as in the world to come. The Y. M. C. A. is not a substitute for the church but a part of it. Churches are not constituted by the presence of the preacher or priest, but by the presence of Jesus Christ.

The Young Men's Christian Association is but a part of the church, established so that all denominations may meet on common ground for the doing of a special work which no one of them could do alone.

Bradford Williams Next Talks.

Bradford Williams will give his Bible recital "Peter and Christ" to men only at Hope chapel tonight at 8 o'clock. The meeting will be held under the auspices of the Men's Club of Hope chapel. Tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 he will give "The Conversation of Christ" in Y. M. C. A. hall. Both men and women are invited. In the evening he will speak in the same place to men only. The topic will be "The puzzles of the puzzled." This meeting will begin at 8 o'clock.

Mrs. Joseph Marshall, of Pitman, was stricken with appendicitis and died while undergoing an operation. Until a few months ago Mrs. Marshall resided in Millville. She was for years the Cumberland county treasurer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and at the recent State convention was made a life member of the union in recognition of her faithful services.

Joseph Roey, of 209 Martin street; Tice White, of 26 North Straight street, and Harry Benninger, of 92 North Eighth street, all of Paterson, applied at different times Friday to the General Hospital, that city, for treatment for minor injuries. Each is employed in a different local machine shop. Roey had some foreign body in his right eye; White got a piece of steel in one of his fingers, and Benninger had the middle finger of his left hand crushed by a weight falling on it.

A massive derrick used in hoisting one of the large stone capitals on the pillars adorning the face of the new Second National Bank building in Paterson collapsed just as the capital stone was dropped on the top of the pillar Friday afternoon. The long arm of the derrick crushed against the side of the old bank building, carrying with it the small steam-hoisting engine. The massive stone did not fall and the derrick lodged against the bank building. No one was injured.

HERE'S A QUINTET OF AGED MASONS

Among the members of Masonic fraternities much interest is evinced in the announcement that at at the annual reunion and banquet of Northern Lodge No. 25, Free and Accepted Masons, of Newark, to be held in the New Auditorium in Newark, on November 22, next, there will be present five members whose affiliation with the lodge aggregates 257 years. Each of the quintet of aged "travelers" entered the Northern Lodge more than fifty years ago, and from that time up to the present the five men have been actively engaged in promoting the welfare of the organization.

The quintet of veteran Masons is made up of Elihu B. Baker, of Newark; Viner J. Hedden, of East Orange; Joseph M. Smith, of Newark; William T. Rae, of Newark, and Charles R. Bishop, of Glen Ridge. Although each of these men has passed the "three score and ten" period of life, their Masonic interest is still strong, and they are looked up to and pointed out as "the prides of old Northern."

With one exception all of the five members first entered Masonry through the doors of Northern Lodge. The exception is Mr. Baker, who came to Northern from a New York lodge, entering the local fraternity on June 22, 1857. The books of the lodge show that it cost him but $3 to have his membership transferred and that his affiliation was allowed the same night that his transfer application was received.

Mr. Bishop, who has been living a retired life in Glen Ridge for many years, first sought membership in Northern on June 1, 1857. Three weeks later his application was acted on favorably and he was admitted, being "raised" on July 6 of the same year. At that time the entrance dues were $20 and the books of the lodge put that amount opposite Mr. Bishop's name.

Mr. Hedden's application was similarly received upon payment of the same fee on September 1, 1856, but, unlike the other four, it took him several months to get "through." He was "passed" on December 1 of the same year, but he was not "raised" until July 20 of the year following.

Mr. Smith "traveled" more smoothly than did Mr. Hedden, or, in fact, any of the others, getting his entrance degrees the same month in which his application was received. Officials of the lodge speak of this as unusual and refer also to the fact that Mr. Smith was "passed" and "raised" the same night. This is said by masons to be an unusual proceeding. Mr. Smith "entered" the lodge October 4, 1858, and four days later was "passed" and "raised."

Mr. Rae, who retired last May from the jewelry firm bearing his name, is seventy-six years old. At the time he quit business in Newark he had been actively engaged in the jewelry trade for fifty-two years. He "entered" Northern Lodge March 14, 1859, was "passed" May 2 following, and on the thirtieth of the same month was given his degrees.

JERSEY MUSIC LOVERS HEAR MME. SEMBRICH.

Charles Jerome Boyd, of East Orange, deserves high compliments for the great success of the music recital given by Mme Marcella Sembrich, at Krueger Auditorium, Newark, Saturday evening, which was attended by a large and cultured audience, including a number of Plainfielders. Mme. Sembrich was assisted by Francis Rogers, baritone, who is well-known here, while a noteworthy feature was the work of Frank LaForce, pianist, who accompanied Mme. Sembrich in a faultless manner.

Mme. Sembrich was down on the program for ten numbers, all of which she sang in a delightful way, while she and Mr. Rogers gave two numbers as a duet. It was a rare opportunity to hear a great singer and those present enjoyed it to the fullest extent.

PATIENTS WHO PREVARICATE.

In one of his inimitable sermons the eloquent Father Fuler is at some pains to discuss the varieties of untruthfulness, says the Hospital. The enumeration of these shades and degrees of lying are in a way as amusing and as practically interesting as Touchstone's list of the species of insults in the giving of the lie.

There be those that lie because they will not, that lie because they cannot, and those that lie because they may not speak truly, and with each and all of these varieties the practitioner has made acquaintance to his grat distress of mind and no less disturbance of temper.

We all know of the untruthfulness of patients, and at some period or other we have all of us had cause to regret that (to quote our Elizabethan preacher once more) men hold not dearer than verisimilitude of fact to the despising of counterfeits and shams.

To large extent patients lie because they cannot speak the truth. The other two classes may be easily disposed of. Those that will not are usually exposed with facility, and the very small section of those that may present no great difficulty at least to the general practitioner But there is a very large class of patients who cannot speak the truth. Their bent is toward exaggeration, the suppression of fact and the suggestion of the fanciful. They are an interesting class, and in a way we should be grateful for their existence, for they present us with a constant reminder of the fact that imagination is not yet extinct in these isles.

Second-class untruthfulness, to abide by Fuller's classification, in the majority of cases is not so much an immorality as a lesion. Many of our patients cannot speak the truth; either through lack of courage or through excess of self-love. They must lie, exaggerate, suppress and dissemble. It is useless to appeal to their better feelings; to tell them that they are placing their health in jeopardy by treating their medical attendant like a man whose eyes have to be dust-dimmed. They are incapabale of recognizing these facts, and they will continue to stick to their versions till the end of the chapter, even though their untruthfulness may be made "transparent to the world and trebly exposed."

CREMATION AMONG THE YUMAS.

The greatest display of natural intelligence seen among them is their tribal custom of cremation, writes E. S. Curtis, of the Yumas in Scribner's. This according to their legends, was taught them by their creator, Matevilye, and they follow his instructions with the true Indian tenacity. One of my Yuma interpreters of the past season came to me with considerable anxiety: "Missioner wants me to come to church, I go to church, when I die they put me in the ground to rot. I no like that. Burned up the way Matevilye say, just ashes. That all right. What you think?" I must confes, as one rather favoring his way, to not being able to see why the old chap should be punished for going to church by being buried against his will.

It is likely that an enthologist would make a poor missionary. However the missionary has something of an argument for his desire to change their ways of disposing of the body, as it is certain that we see in the Indian cremation much that is not a part of the modern method, as it is here that he pays the greatest attention to the teachings of the Yuman creeds as taught them by the Creator

At their approach of death, relatives, friends and neighbors gather about, waiting for the soul to take its flight to the sand-hills of the afterworld, a land of plenty, where when one melon is picked another comes, "no one sees it come; you just pick it, another one there." The body is prepared at once after death and carried out in blankets to the place of cremation which has in the meanwhile been prepared.

A shallow hole has been dug in the earth and the fuel piled high on this. The body is placed on top of the fuel, after which fire is applied at the four cardinal points. During the time the burning the multitude stand about and wail in the most melancholy fashion, continuing until the fuel and body are but a mass of embers and ashes. These are raked into a pit and covered with earth. And so are the rites to the departed among the tribes of the Yuma stock.

SHAW'S OWN MIRROR.

Wit Turns Glass on Himself with Characteristic Reflection.

Like all men, I play many parts; and none of them is more or less real than another. To one audience I am the occupier of a house in Adelphi terrace; to another I am "one of those damned Socialists." A discussion in a club of very young ladies as to whether I could be more appropriately described as an old josser or an old geezer ended in the carrying of an amendment in favor of an old bromide. I am also a soul of infinite worth. I am in short, not only what I can make of myself, which varies greatly from hour to hour and emergency to no-emergency, but what you can see in me. — George Bernard Shaw, in the London Nation, in reviewing G. K. Chesterton's "George Bernard Shaw."

Had Cause for Alarm.

An elderly patient in the Tennessee mountain region was suffering from a malady, the remedy for which the doctor prescribed in the form of capsules, relates the San Francisco Star. The old woman trusted her medical adviser, but for the medicine she evinced much suspicion.

Some time after she had taken the capsules she was asked by her son how she felt.

"Porely."

"Don't you want nuthin' to eat?"

"No."

Soon, however, the old woman arose from her bed and took her seat in a rocking chair. Thinking that the attention would be gratefully received, the son filled her pipe, and taking a live coal from the hearth, carried both to his mother.

"Take that away, son!" yelled the old woman, in the utmost fright. "Don't you know better'n to come near me when I've got them cartridges in me?"

Easily Changed.

Said the magistrate to the policeman. "But this man doesn't correspond to the description. He has no deep scar on his forehead."

"Well," replied the bobby, "that can be easily supplied; and, besides, I think I am entitled to at least a portion of the $100 reward for bringing him here. It was no easy job."

SONG FROM THE GARDENER.

Wee, pretty jewels have I three,
Frolicking under the chestnut tree.

Two are my diamonds, one my pearl
Those are my boys and this is my girl.

My oldest shall be a sergeant tall
With a walk and a beard like a general;

And an arm for his king and a heart for a wench,
And an itch in his bones to stick the French.

My second shall learn the ways of peace,
Of spreading bloom and field's increase.

Of spade and hoe and clod and seed,
Of dropping fruit and clinging weed.

Not much he'll know of war and fame—
But every bud he'll call by name.

Oh, and the youngest, oh, my pride
'Tis she will stay at her mother's side,

With broom and kettle and rag and pan
Till the good Lord send her a gardenerman,

And a lodge and children two or three
Frolicking under a chestnut tree.

New Missiles for Weddings.

It is quite singular how of late years a decided objection to the ancient custom of rice and slipper throwing after the bride and bridegroom has sprung up, so much so that several comparatively new ideas have of late come almost unversally into vogue.

Instead of the hard rice pellets, which occasionally are thrown with too much vehemence to be pleasant, some brides go in for substituting the tiniest ladies' slippers as well as horseshoes made of soft silver paper. These resemble a sparkling shower of silver. Other brides lean to providing their friends with dried rose or other sweet smelling things to be thrown after them.—The Gentlewoman.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE TALK

Hence he understands the unreality of matter and evil and knows that man is not sick but that the patient is simply suffering from a false mesmeric belief. From that standpoint he proceeds to correct the errors of belief with the Truth of being and thus establishes harmony on a spiritual, scientific basis.

It is not to be wondered at, indeed it is inevitable, that Christian Scientists should love Mrs. Eddy for having brought to the world this Science of Salvation, the true knowledge of God and man, the spiritual understanding of the Holy Scriptures which enables them to know themselves and to demonstrate that "saving faith" which alone leads to heaven.

Mrs. Eddy did not simply state her discovery to the world; she first demonstrated it and then offered it as a demonstrable Science for all mankind to profit by. This Science overcomes evil, by giving a true knowledge of God and His Christ, it enables all humanity to work out their own salvation and reach that pure consciousness, which Jesus called the "kingdom of heaven."

GOT A LITTLE SATISFACTION

Editor, Unable to Collect Bill for Paper, Could Afford to Affront the Widow.

To the editor of a little Maine newspaper there came the other day an indignant elderly woman, who waved a bit of paper in the editorial face.

"Lookee here!" she said. "What does this mean—a bill for the Citizen to my husband that's been dead two years? Ye don't expect his widow to pay debts o' his contracted long after he's dead?"

"You say he has not been getting the paper?" said the editor, after long thought.

"No, ye donderhead!" screamed the woman, "I tell ye he's been dead two years!"

"Strange," mused the editor. "The postoffice department has not notified me of his failure to receive them. Quite sure you yourself haven't been enjoying the estimable educational values of a perusal of my sheet?"

"That ain't the point," argued the widow. "You've been sending the noospaper and a bill to a man that's dead. It's your affair, not mine.

"Well," said the editor finally, perceiving that he must be a loser, "in future, madam, I will cause an extra copy to be printed on asbestos to insure that your husband receives his Citizen regularly."

TOAD EVIDENTLY A THINKER

Clever Maneuver by Which Batrachian Foiled His Inveterate Enemy, the Serpent.

The following snake story was told some years ago by a reputable citizen of Anson county. Driving along a public road one day he saw a toad frog crossing the road at top speed—hitting only the high places and few of them. As the frog disappeared in the bosky underbrush on one side a black snake in hot pursuit made its appearance on the other. The story-teller followed the two into the bushes to see what the result would be. He had proceeded only a short distance when he found the frog at bay, facing the snake and with the latter circling about in the effort to make an attack from the rear. His frogship kept turning all the time, always facing the enemy.

The reason of this maneuver on the snake's part was that the frog had in its mouth, held crosswise and about the middle, a stick about the size and length of a lead pencil. The frog knew the snake could not swallow him so long as he presented such a front. The man watched the performance for some time and when he left the snake was still circling the frog and the latter facing its enemy on every turn.—Charlotteville Observer.

A London Problem.

They are dealing with a psychological problem in London that is not on the cards. The "problem" is nothing less than a little baby boy in the Wickham workhouse, a scrap of a child only two years and four months old, who no sooner has to make any serious remark than he rolls forth such a string of unmitigated billingsgate that he petrifies all who hear him. He is described as a beautiful child with dark, soulful eyes, soft fair hair, chubby limbs and the face of an angel. At ordinary times he is the best of boys, but does anything upset his equanimity he brings into play such a volume of foul language that he quite contaminates the infant ward. Where the baby learned to curse and swear is the question. It has been so far a mystery, as his antecedents are unknown, and his age so tender his comprehension of the forms of language might well be of the slightest, but such does not appear to be the case. This little workhouse baby evidently knows what he is talking about.

The Duty of Rest and Play.

Rest is just as much a necessity of life as Work is. In the face of the popular theory which supposes that work in itself is respectable unless it is proved to be wrong and that rest in itself is suspicious—that it must prove itself to be right—in the face of this popular theory, which is the theory of the spelling books, of careless talk and untrained consciences, I must remind you that Work and Rest have each its own place, and that neither must step beyond that place. In its right place and proportion Rest is as dignified, as creditable, as Work is.—Edward Everett Hale, 1857.

His Little Deal.

"Ha, ha!" exclaimed the boarder. "You actually bought a gold brick?"

"Yes," answered the farmer, as he took the specimen tenderly and laid it on the mantelshelf. "All the city folks that came here expected to see one. It seemed like they wouldn't believe I was a regular farmer unless I could show a gold brick. So when I went to town and this fellow offered me I give the fellow $99 in confederate money and a Canada quarter, which is cheaper than I could have made one myself."

Ants in Battle.

The pugnacity of ants leads them to amuse themselves during long intervals of peace by sham battles. They rise upon their hind feet, wrestle, seize each other by the jaws or legs, mount on each other's backs, roll over and over and engage in other antics. Neighboring communities of ants are prone to engage in wars which continue through weeks and months, and usually end with the annihilation of the weaker community.

HOUSE MAJORITY MAY CAUCUS DECEMBER 7

When the Republican Assemblymen-elect gather at Trenton tomorrow William W. Smalley, as dean of the House of Assembly, will fix a time for holding a formal caucus of the majority members for the purpose of apportioning the various offices and to ratify the selection of those decided upon for Speaker and leader. Mr. Smalley has set no date for this as yet, but will confer with the State leaders regarding it this week. He thinks the first Tuesday in December would give sufficient opportunity for "preliminary work" and will suggest that day for the caucus.

In the apportionment of the various clerical offices consideration will be given to the claims of the different county leaders and it is possible several changes in the personnel of the office-holders of the last session may be made. It has already been decided by the party powers that Captain James Parker, of Passaic, should be continued as clerk of the House, and Upton S. Jeffreys, of Camden, assistant clerk.

The post of journal clerk and assistant journal clerk will be sought again by George H. Johnston, of Union, and Lewis R. Williams, of Mercer, who have had the positions often before. Essex, it was stated yesterday, would again demand that George A. Grover be appointed supervisor of bills, and Walter P. Purcell, one of the assistant supervisors. It is understood, however, that Essex may not present William R. Swan as a candidate for sergeant-at-arms. Mr. Swan has held the position for two years and some of the leaders think he has had it long enough. The post may go to another county, although Chairman Alfred N. Dalrymple, of the Essex County Republican committee, may oppose this when he gets to Trenton tomorrow.

Last year Essex was apportioned, beside the sergeantcy, the supervisor and assistant supervisor of bills, an assistant journal clerk, and two doorkeepers. Louis J. Beyer was the asistant journal clerk, and Paul Weckmueller and Charles P. Schmidt the doorkeeprs. Inasmuch as Essex will have no candidate for Speaker and may not go after the leadership, it is understood the delegation from that county will insist it be given the same apportionment as last year. This does not necessarily mean, however, that Grover, Purcell, Beyer, Weckmueller and Schmidt will be continued in their positions, as none of the Assemblymen-elect are new legislators and may ask some of the plums for their own constituents.

County Chairman Alfred N. Dalrymple and most of the Essex delegation will go to Trenton tomorrow to confer with the leaders about the House jobs. It is probably the Essex members may decide then which seats they wish in the House and may also get together on the chairmanship of their delegation. Duane E. Minard, of East Orange, would like the post of chairman, and Mr. Dalrymple is not opposing this ambition, but the majority of the colleagues of Minard are. They insist they will not support his candidacy. Robert S. Terhune has been asked to go out for the post, and William Lee and J. William Huegel are also receptive aspirants.

COMMEMORATE NAMING OF NEW PROVIDENCE.

Sunday evening in the Methodist church, at New Providence, a special service was held to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the naming of New Providence. Long before the Revolutionary War, when the sturdy settlers settled there, they found it well wooded and watered, and thousands of wild turkeys. So they called their small settlement "Turkey," and by that name it was known for over one hundred years.

The Presbyterans were the first to establish a place of worship on the site of the present edifice, and as time went on the roof of the old church commenced to decay and one week day fell in. When the congregation assembled the following Sunday they were so thankful that the disaster had not happened while they were worshipping that they then and there resolved that it was the hand of Providence that protected them, and renamed the town New Providence, the name it bears today.

Rev. Jesse L. Peck, pastor of the church, preached an historical sermon commemorating the event, and the choir rendered a special program.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonce Texier and daughter, of Perth Amboy, have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Hippolyte Texier, of Watchung.

Mrs. Mary Hall, of Elizabeth, is spending a few weeks at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John H. Williams, of Jackson avenue.

Dr. Albert Pitts, of this city, has been engaged as medical adviser and inspector by the Board of Education of North Plainfield township.

Mrs. Lewis Bimble, Jr., of Jefferson avenue, left on Friday for an extended visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Wikoff, of Little Valley. She was joined by her husband Saturday. Mr. Bimble will enjoy a few days' hunting while at Little Valley. It is said that game is plentiful there.

A Wise Economy

Do you realize that sometimes THE ENTIRE COST OF ADMINISTRATION HAS BEEN SAVED to an estate through careful handling of its affairs?

Carelessness, incompetence and incapacity dissipate an estate as quickly as dishonesty. Hence the desirability of leaving your estate in the hands in which HONESTY, EXPERIENCE AND CAPACITY ARE ALL UNITED.

Individual executors may not be called upon to handle more than one estate in a lifetime, but it is THE CONSTANT DUTY OF THE TRUST COMPANY TO DISCHARGE SUCH RESPONSIBILITIES.

Successful Furnace Fires

PATENTED
The BOYNTON Square Fire Pot

makes tending the furnace easy, but best of all it makes a joyous fire. Round fire pots burn strongly through the center with a rim of half dead clinkers at the edge and when you shake the fire the middle drops out. You've noticed it. Fires built in BOYNTON Square Pots are all live coals. A shake down is an even shake. The whole fire settles. There is no waste. The fuel being equal, a square pot will develop almost twice the heat, or the same heat for about half. The square pot is our patent and can be had only in the BOYNTON furnaces. We have a dealer in your town. He will be glad to show you.

There are BOYNTON heating plants of all kinds. Ask about our Round or Sectional Boilers for Steam or Hot Water. Also Ranges.

The Battle

By

Cleveland Moffett

Copyright, 1909, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

"What—to carry the machine?"

"No, to carry the dough. Each baker will mix his own flour in his own sponging trough, and then we'll put the troughs on a truck and haul them to the place where we run the machine. When the flour is kneaded we'll haul them back."

"How long will the kneading take?" questioned Philip.

"Ten minutes for one batch of loaves," answered Moran—"say 700 pounds of dough. That's with the machine. It would take a man an hour."

"You see what we save," remarked Haggleton.

"Are these troughs on wheels?" pursued Philip.

"Sure," said Moran.

"Allowing half an hour for each batch," calculated Haggleton—"I mean for kneading and hauling both ways—that gives us twenty-four batches in twelve hours—say 4,000 loaves. That's 8,000 pounds of flour, four tons a day, or twenty-eight tons a week for the combination. There's a nice profit in that when you get it by the carload."

"It sounds good," mused Philip, "but are you sure of enough bakeshops for the combination?"

"We'll have six before the week's out—that is, if you fix it so that we're trusted for flour by the carload. You'd better get busy."

Philip turned in surprise.

"That's right," said Haggleton. "We look to you to get us flour direct from the mills. We're going to cut out the jobber's profit."

"And you're going to risk all in this scheme?"

"What are we risking?" answered the old man. "Flour has a permanent value, and so has a kneading machine."

"Suppose these bakers refuse to join your combination?"

"Refuse? Does a man refuse good money if you offer it to him? Why, within ten days all the little bakers around here will be offering premiums for a chance to come in with us."

Meanwhile Haggleton had not forgotten that other boast of his that he would make the neglected Moran home as clean and orderly as a New England farmhouse.

The iron beds had been replaced by sleeping couches, neatly covered; the cooking stove was hidden behind a homemade screen, Joe's handiwork, and all around the room ran shelves with muslin curtains, behind which were kept the many things that formerly had littered the floor and been piled in corners, in hopeless confusion. Under one of the couches a tin bathtub was snugly put away. It was the pride of all but Moran, who looked upon it with disdain.

Brightened though her life now was in many external ways, Jenny passed her days in profound unhappiness. She loved Philip—oh, how she loved him! Yet how could a man love a girl from the Haymarket? Still, she was pretty, very pretty at her best, and, after all, Philip was a man! The taint of her past was seared in her soul. She thought that she knew men and their besetting weakness! She was pretty! she knew. But, alas, what availed her beauty if it made no appeal to Philip? Ah, that was the point! Perhaps it did appeal to him. Several times she had felt his eyes on her in a way that—well, she could not be sure; he was finer than most men.

Then there was the evening when, believing her absent, he had entered her bedroom. How he had started back in confused apology, although there was really no offense. Every one knew that there was no privacy in a tenement, so why make such a fuss over a glimpse of bare arms and shoulders?

These reflections had gradually led her to conceive a definite plan—she must talk to Philip alone, she must find some way of getting him to the flat in the afternoon when the others were away. She could never ask him herself—that would spoil everything. Joe must help her in getting him there.

This plan was busily working in her brain one morning shortly after the launching of the bakery trust as she and Joe were setting things to rights in the room and discussing Mr. Jackson's achievements.

Joe suddenly startled Jenny with a momentous announcement:

"Say, Jen, beginning today, I draw ten bones a week if I cut out pool rooms."

"How?"

"In the bakery scheme."

"The bakery scheme," repeated Jenny thoughtfully. "That's what Phil is talking about all the time now."

"Phil listens to what Mr. Jackson has to say, all right. He takes a lot of interest in him."

"Yes, he's here most of the time." Jenny looked at the diver's picture on the wall, her eyes widening a little.

"You remember what I told you, Joe?"

"About Phil? Sure. Little Jenny wants him all to herself. And if she can't have him for herself then the trained nurse lady that took away our dear little star boarders to the hospital had better back out for herself."

"I will tell you one thing," he observed. "If I was Miss Margaret you'd not see me driving below Twenty-third street. No, ma'am. I'd make brother cough up. He's got nothing but money, or his wife has."

"How do you know that she has a rich brother?"

"Why, you know it too."

"I do not!"

"Why, Jenny, weren't you nurse for his kid?"

"Good God!"

Jenny stared at him with startled eyes, then shifted her gaze beyond him. She began to walk up and down restlessly, gesticulating, muttering to herself.

"What's the matter?"

"Oh, nothing, nothing! You say Miss Margaret is the sister of Howard Lawrence, up in Sixty-third street?"

"Yes."

Suddenly Jenny stopped. She had reached a decision. The time had come to put her stratagem into execution.

"Well, what about Lawrence?" asked Joe.

"Oh, nothing. I thought it strange that—that his sister should be here—among us. That's all."

"Is it?" thought Joe. "Not by a long shot. You can't fool me."

"What time is it?"

"Half past 10."

"Listen, Joe," pleaded Jenny. "You said that you would help me. Now you must. I want to be alone with Philip. I have an idea."

"I will help you."

"I want you to write Phil a note," explained Jenny feverishly. "Tell him that you are in great trouble and must see him at once here. And tell him to come alone—do you understand, alone?"

Poor Jenny's thoughts flew back to her bitterly won knowledge of the old life she had left for Philip's sake. She was beautiful; she knew it! He should know it too. Her beauty and this strange discovery which she had suddenly made concerning Margaret Lawrence's relationship—she held two cards now. She would play them!

Joe read her thoughts fairly accurately. Whatever it was that she knew about Howard Lawrence was to be used as an argument to win Philip's love, or at least to weaken Margaret's hold upon his affection.

"But say, Jenny," said Joe, "what is there in it for me? I am not asking you to give me money—I'm only asking for the loan of a dollar until I begin to draw my salary from Mr. Jackson." She gave him the money.

"Make the note strong," she said. "He must come."

Joe reassured Jenny and hurried away.

Haggleton entered briskly and found Jenny gazing fondly at the picture of his son.

"He's a fine young fellow, that Philip Ames, isn't he?"

"Phil? Indeed he is. But if anybody tells you that he is easy to understand"—

"Gentle seems to understand him."

"Gentle thinks he does. Say, Mr. Jackson, you have Gentle worried, all right."

"I? How?"

"Oh, with all this bakeshop business. Before you came it was nothing but the wrongs of the poor. Now it's nothing but money making schemes."

"You think Philip is interested?" he asked casually.

"Interested? You know he is interested. Why, yesterday, Gentle was trying to talk tenement house reform to Phil, but he hardly listened. He was figuring out the profits of that electrical machine for kneading bread."

"Good!"

Haggleton was immensely pleased.

"I never saw Phil that way before," continued Jenny slowly.

"You like him, don't you?"

"Everybody likes him. I love him." Jenny continued:

"Yes, he is changed. And this sort of encourages me."

"How so?"

Jenny stumbled on.

"You have made me see," the young woman was saying, "that there are two Philips—the one Gentle knows and the one you know."

She gazed at the picture.

"Yes," she added, with a contented smile, "that's it—two Philips. You have waked up the one that Gentle does not know. Why shouldn't I"—

"Two Philips? What a strange fancy!"

Haggleton spoke merely to make her go on.

"I tell you there are two Philips," she insisted. "One Philip loves this trained nurse. What's the matter with the other Philip loving me?"

She smiled up confidingly.

"Here is a new complication," thought Haggleton—"still another battle to be fought over Philip!"

"Do you really think that you can win him away from this girl?" he asked.

The answer staggered him.

"Do you really think that you can win him away from Gentle?"

What did this young woman know? Not that he was Philip's father, of course. But the rest of it she had gauged pretty accurately by intuition, no doubt.

Jenny began to pay her compliments to her hated rival.

"She makes me tired with her airs, and she ain't strong for you, Mr. Jackson," she added viciously. "When I met her I saw that she didn't care for me, and she doesn't know anything about me. You do, though I never told you."

"I have guessed a little, Jenny. I respect you all the more for your grit in returning here."

The teams already entered are Elks, Red Men, Knights of Columbus, Pond Tool Works, Ponies and the Raritan team of Raritan.

BOROUGH BOYS ARE DEFEATED AT LAST

North Plainfield High School's sturdy football eleven met its first defeat of the season at the hands of the Wilson Military Academy eleven at Finderne Saturday afternoon, the score being 17 to 9. Superior weight of the soldier team counted heavily against the borough lads and was largely responsible for their downfall.

An unique feature of the game was that the N. P. H. S. warriors did all of their scoring in the first fifteen minutes of play in the first half. Percy Bailey was the individual star, and it was due to his brilliant work, that North Plainfield registered her nine points.

In the first five minutes of play Bailey secured a touchdown and afterward kicked the goal. Ten minutes later Bailey dropped a field goal from the thirty yard line.

Despite the hurricane start the borough lads were unable to score again. In the second half, however, they worried the cadets, but were unable to penetrate their heavy line.

WATCHUNG HUNT CLUB ENJOYS WEEKLY RUN

The members of the Watchung Hunt Club to the number of about a dozen enjoyed the weekly chase after the hounds on Saturday afternoon. They met at Dog Tavern and hunted through Fanwood, Westfield and returned to Netherwood. The going was fine and the chase was exciting from start to finish. There were three spills, Miss Gertrude Noe, Miss Mildred Wildey and Frederick Bull taking tumbles. Neither one was seriously injured.

Those enjoying the chase were Miss Gertrude Noe, Miss Mildred Wildey, Rufus Finch, Hart Farlee, Charles Wildey, C. W. Fisk, C. E. S. Bellows, Ruppert Anderson, Richard Waring, Paul Harrison and Cris. Cumins. On Wednesday the members will meet at Netherwod for a short chase.

Y. M. C. A. Wins.

That the Y. M. C. A. basketball team has a big supply of fast material on hand was demonstrated Saturday night when the first five, which was made up of candidates for places on the team, trounced the Business Men's team by the score of 67 to 12.

Holy Cross Wins.

Holy Cross' crack football eleven pulverized the Raritan eleven before about 500 spectators Saturday afternoon by the score of 21 to 0. The result never was in doubt and the locals experienced little difficulty in rolling up a big score.

GUN FOR BRE'R RABBITT

Hunters Start Out Bright and Early for the Cottontails.

MANY LICENSES ARE ISSUED.

City and Borough Profit by the New Law—Where They Seek Game.

Hundreds of local nimrods left town last night on hunting expeditions as today is the opening day of the rabbit season. The majority of local hunters directed their steps toward Hunterdon county which has always been a favorite district to hunt the cottontail. Other contented themselves by going to different points on the Watchung mountains, where the bunnies and game are said to be plentiful this season.

In the vicinity of Mt. Bethel, Warrenville and Berkley Heights, rabbits are said to be more numerous than in several years. The warm weather which has marked the present autumn season is a big thing for the hunters as it fattened the rabbits.

All of the trains going westward were jammed last night although the Jersey Central increased the accommodations in anticipation of a big exodus from Newark and New York. The cars as a rule were packed when Plainfield was reached, and as a result it fell to the lot of local hunters to stand durng the journey.

The new hunting license law enriched the treasuries of city and borough considerably as each hunter was obliged to pay $1.15 for a permit. In the city about 300 licenses were issued, while Borough Clerk Martin issued certificates to about half that number.

In the army of local sportsmen who went out this morning are Sergeant Herbert Overbaugh, William Feiring and Samuel Field, who are stationed at Flemington for three days; Fred S. Cutter went in an automobile, to Hamden, Hunterdon county; Chauncey Colthar travelled to Martinsville in an auto, where he expects to bag a goodly quantity of bunnies. Hillaire Blatz and Charles Emmons are gunning in the same vicinity. Wilbur Randolph and Dr. J. Hervey Buchanan are at Washington, Warren county, on a three-day expedition. Henry Haurand, Fred Endress, Ed Barry and Herman Theiss also took an auto trip, and are scouting in the vicinity of Whitehouse. Joseph R. Blatz and Everett Marsh returned this morning from a successful trapping expedition to Mt. Bethel and vicinity and brought with them, seventy-six muskrats, two skunks and five squirrel.

Henry Vossler and Percy McVoy started off yesterday for the Clinton, Annandale and Pickle Mountain district, where they will remain until Wednesday; George E. Eveland, of South Second street, and Owen Driver, are at Hampton Junction.

William Jackson, colored, who was indicted on a charge of assault and battery on Patrolman Tobias Nolan, was put on trial in the Union county court this morning. He is represented by William G. DeMeza, while Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., assistant prosecutor, acts for the State.

The offense for which Jackson was indicted occurred on July 29 last, when the negro engaged the policeman in an altercation, following insulting language used by the former. In the fight which followed, Patrolman Nolan was struck in the head wit hhis club and it is alleged was bitten on the hand.

Rev. Mr. Goodrich Says "Cut Loose."

Rev. Charles A. Goodrich's sermon last night on "Cutting Loose" was an appeal to men to cut away from sin. He said that Plainfield has been moved before with the mighty wind of God, which at once blows man away from his evil ways and carries him to the destination which God would have him arrive at. The young men of this city, he said, would do well to let this breath of God take them and do with them what He would. Mrs. Bender sang "A Prayer" with beautiful expression and the choir was in good form.

Seventh Recital at Grace Church.

Organist S. Frederick Smith's seventh recital was an epoch in organ music yesterday. Never before has an organist given a recital which has so pleased the lovers of organ music as did that of yesterday. The attendance at these recitals is increasing greatly and many of those who attend remain to the services of the church afterwards.

METHOD OF INDUCING SLEEP

Self-Suggestion Plays a Great Part—Worry is the Main Thing to Be Avoided.

The next point to bear in mind is that self-suggestion plays a great part in the production of sleep, writes Dr. H. McComb in Harper's Bazar. Ordinarily we do not sleep by accident or haphazard. We resolve to sleep. We go through a variety of actions all suggestive of a change from our normal waking condition. We undress, we place ourselves in a comfortable position, we close our eyes. We believe and expect that we are going to sleep, and the result is—sleep. One of the great preventatives of sleep is the fear of not sleeping. Once this fear is broken down, we sleep. The insomniac worries about his insomnia, and this very worry deepens the mischief. Hence the sufferer should suggest to himself again and again: "If I sleep, well; if I don't sleep I will at least gain rest by keeping my mind calm and my body relaxed." In a word, our chances of getting sleep increase if we assume the external physical attitude which corresponds to sleep, if we relax every muscle and let it stay relaxed, if we breathe lightly and regularly, if we call up the imaginations of a sleeping person, and talk and think sleep to ourselves, repeating silently and in a quiet dreamy fashion such a formula as this: "There is no reason why I should not sleep. My mind is at peace. Sleep is coming. I am getting sleepy. I am about to sleep. I am asleep."

EASY TO DETECT BAD MONEY

Hold Bill Up to the Light and Examine the Silk Threads in the Paper.

Despite the utmost vigilance of our efficient secret service men, the making counterfeit money in this country has not been wholly suppressed. Spurious coins and paper tokens occasionally get into circulation and some of these are so well done as almost to defy detection by experts.

Among the latest samples of the counterfeiters' art is a $10 bill, one of the cleverest imitations on record. A speciment of this issue was received and paid out by several banks, being regarded by all who handled it as genuine. In time it reached the subtreasury at New York and there its spuriousness at once became known.

On first inspection the bill appears to be a real product of the treasury department, but when held up to the light the little particles of silk, which in a genuine bill are curved and twisted in the paper, are seen to be straight and hard. A magnifying glass shows some very slight discrepancies between the face of the bill and that of a genuine one.

Subtreasury officials state that the bogus note was engraved by a master in the art who may once have been employed in the bureau of engraving at Washington. Every person who receives a $10 bill, says Leslie's Weekly, should apply to it at least the simple test above given of holding it up to the light and noting the condition of the silk threads.

True to Memory of Beau Nash.

The famous Beau Nash was at one time extremely fond of a beautiful girl called Juliana Papjoy, sometimes known as the Bishopstrow belle. She used to ride about the streets of Bath on a fine gray horse carrying a whip with many thongs, a fad which gained for her the title of Lady Betty Besom. Juliana was very kind-hearted and during the last five years of the beau's life she nursed him devotedly. After his death she vowed that she would never again sleep in a bed and took up her abode in a large hollow tree, where she lived for many years, earning a scanty livelihood by selling herb medicines and fetching and carrying. At last Juliana became very ill and, knowing she could not possibly recover, she felt an intense longing to die in her old cottage home at Bishopstrow. More dead than alive, she set out on this last journey, and managed to reach the house where she was born in time to die there.

Eugene Field's Joke on Dr. Hale.

Edward Everett Hale greatly enjoyed a joke which was perpetrated on him by Eugene Field, says the Woman's Home Companion. Field celebrated one of Hale's visits to Chicago by giving a luncheon in his honor, inviting a number of prominent persons to meet him. "Field was aware," said Hale, "that I was a temperance man, and therefore I was somewhat surprised to see that the table on which the luncheon was served was very abundantly supplied with bottles labeled 'whisky,' 'brandy' and 'champagne.' But when these bottles came to be uncorked they were all found to contain nothing but water."

Different.

"I wrote him that I was ready to come home."

"Was he glad?"

"He wrote me that he would have to borrow money to pay my fare."

"What did you do?"

"I asked him what I should do, and he said he would borrow money enough for me to stay there a while longer."

Described.

"Pa, what is meant by a nervous wreck?"

"A nervous wreck, my boy, is something that a woman says she is every time she gets a headache."—Detroit Free Press.

Frederick Mathushek, the founder of our house, was born at the Palace of Manheim, Germany, June 9, 1814. Before he reached the age of seventeen years he had made several improvements in pianos. In 1840 he came to America, where he devoted his life to the manufacture and improvement of the piano-forte. DEFECTS OF SOCIALISM

Prof. Daniels Says Big Business Men Could Better Manage Government.

SELF INTEREST IS FIRST.

Princeton's Political Economy Scholar Talks Before the Monday Afternoon Club.

The Monday Afternoon Club in its study of Socialism, having heard three lectures, setting forth the claims of socialism, listened yesterday to a lecture on "Defects in the Socialist Program," by Winthrop More Daniels, professor of political economy at Princeton University.

Professor Daniels, admitting the difficulty of defining a program that differed in the minds of its representatives, and took the color of the mind through which it passed confined himself to a single aspect of the socialist program, the psychological. The motive of self interest, the lecturer claimed, was the compelling motive of the world's work and the motive of asquisitiveness was not to be discountenanced and reprobated, as socialists would have it. While it is true that mankind responds to altruistic motives Professor Daniels termed it the consummaton of folly to claim for them in the world's industries a superiority over the motives of acquisitiveness, which are more constant, more powerful and more intense in their energy.

The competitive instinct, absolutely inadicable, he said, did not engender bitterness if the competition were fair and above board. Most of the heads of large business interests, he added, could manage the government better than it is now done, and he claimed for most of them integrity and honor.

The lecturer closed with a transposition of Saint Bernard's sayings on knowledge. Some desire to be rich for the sake of riches, which is selfishness; some desire to be rich that they may be known as rich, which is base ambition; some desire to be rich that they may sell their riches, which is miserliness; some desire to be rich that they may use riches wisely, which is prudence, and some desire to be rich that they may do good to others, which is charity.

MONROE AVENUE CHURCH RAISES $630 IN FEW MINUTES.

For the purpose of meeting certain church expenses, the members of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, adopted a novel method on Sunday to raise money. The sum of $570 was required and the scheme worked so well that $630 was subscribed. A large chart was marked off in squares, each one representing a different amount.

The congregation was then asked to purchase these squares, which they did promptly. The money was raised after an earnest sermon by the pastor, Rev. C. S. Kemble on the theme, "Every Man His Own Millionaire."

A., will make the address of the evening. Special music will be a feature. A social hour will follow. All young people of the city are invited. The song service will begin at 7:45 o'clock.

LITTLE "REGGIE" SAW CITY ALL BY HIMSELF

Little Reggie Squires thought it would be a fine thing to take a trip all alone, by himself, to the city, which appeared to him to be the biggest thing in a city way that had ever impressed itself on his immature mind, so he wandered away from his home on Clinton avenue yesterday afternoon bent on exploring this fine town.

Of course he was reported lost, but he didn't know it and he kept on going until he had rounded Cape Horn as exemplified by the corner of Park avenue and West Front street, and there the swirling currents of traffic untempered by any southerly wind pushed his little craft across the seething seas of moving humanity and landed him close to Brokaw's creamery on East Front street. From there he was steered due west until he was safely anchored at home. This is the first voyage of exploration that Reggie ever took and it is safe to say he wont go on another without a pilot.

MERCHANTS RE-ELECT FORCE AS PRESIDENT

Officers were nominated and the annual banquet committee appointed at the November meeting of the Plainfield's Merchants' Association, last night. The election will be held in January. These officers were nominated without opposition:

President, A. E. Force; first vice-president, Henry Schuldenfrei; second vice-president, F. A. Duttenhofer; treasurer, John S. Johnston; secretary, H. P. Greenwood; executive board, the above named officers and Herman Schwed and Morris C. VanArsdale.

There was a discussion regarding the annual banquet and it was decided to hold the same in January the date to be announced later. This committee was appointed to arrange the details:

Theodore J. Shirley, Herman Schwed, Robert Barnhart, George O. Stevens, A. C. Lorhman and F. A. Duttenhofer.

After the meeting last night the members enjoyed a collation and cigars.

THEIR MARRIED LIFE "GRAND, SWEET SONG."

"All is 'merry as a marriage bell' in my home," said Patrick Powers to Judge Runyon this morning, and I think the lesson will prove to have been a blessing."

Some days ago Judge Runyon had occasion to admonish a woman who was brought before him on a charge of intoxication and the magistrate told her that if she would bring a letter from her husband which would show that they were living in perfect harmony and love he would be satisfied that she was truthful and the incident would be closed. Judge Runyon has since then received such a communication and, as Mr. Powers says, all is well. All of which goes to show that justice tempered with mercy is the right remedy in certain cases.

Aide for Deputy County Clerk.

Deputy County Clerk Zerman K. Norman, who is regarded as the hardest-worked man in the service of Union county, has at last been given an assistant. His helper, Charles W. Runyon, of this city, entered upon his duties today. Mr. Norman for several years was a member of the law firm of Gerber & Norman, of which County Clerk James J. Gerber, who died suddenly in 1893 while in office, was the senior partner. Mr. Norman has been connected with the county clerk's office since March, 1881, and for many years performed the work of official searcher of titles. Mr. Runyon is a very active member of the well-known Republican "Get Together" Club of Plainfield.

Another Wheel Stolen.

A slick bicycle thief is working this town with apparent impunity. Wheels disappear as if by magic and the thief gets away without being observed or leaving any trace behind him. Yesterday he got a brand new Pierce wheel belonging to Harry Hand, a delivery boy. The wheel was left for about five minutes in the rear of Miss Katharine Daly's millinery shop on West Front street, while Master Hand was in the store. When he came out the wheel had disappeared and has not been recovered.

Yearly Meeting at New Market.

The yearly meeting of the Seventh-Day Baptist churches of New Jersey and New York city will be held with the New Market church November 19-21. On account of this meeting no services will be held at the Plainfield Seventh-Day Baptist church next week Saturday.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE

Annual Meeting of the Women's Foreign Society of Elizabeth District.

TWO SESSIONS ARE HELD.

Miss Hughes and Dr. Mary Carleton Speak This Afternoon on the Work in China.

The annual meeting of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Elizabeth District, Newark Conference, is in session today in the parlors of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church. The meeting was opened by a short address by Mrs. George Tuttle followed by Scripture reading by the pastor of the church, Rev. Charles E. Kimball.

Appointment of committees and reports of the various officers were read including a very interesting review of the work being done in this district. After the reports of the auxiliary associations had been read Mrs. T. R. MacDonald sang a solo, after which the annual election of officers was begun.

Luncheon was served to the visiting delegates and the afternoon session began at 2 o'clock. Mrs. J. H. Knowles, of Newark, opened the session with a reading and two interesting addresses were given by Miss Hughes and Dr. Mary Carleton, both returned missionaries from China.

These officers were chosen: President, Mrs. Nelson A. Miller, Plainfield; first vice-president, Mrs. W. Morton, Plainfield; second vice-president, Mrs. William Porter, Princess Bay, S. I.; third vice-president, Mrs. Katherwn Corbet, Cranford; recording secretary, Mrs. J. F. Sayers, Elizabeth; treasurer, Mrs. J. E. Stevens, Elizabeth. Miss Charlotte Birstall, of Elizabeth, was unable to sing a solo as arranged, and instead read a paper entitled "Echoes From the Atlantic City Convention." It was warmly received by the 110 delegates present.

J. M. WHITON LECTURES ON "FLOWERY KINGDOM"

J. M. Whiton, of Madison avenue, gave a highly interesting lecture this morning on Japan to the pupils of the High School, in the auditorium of that institution. Mr. Whiton's lecture was illustrated with some beautiful and highly colored lantern slides which gave an impression which some have always held, that Japan, the land of Nippon, is really the flowery Kingdom instead of her neighbor, China.

Judging from the slides thrown on the screen, Japan is a land of pictures, every back yard is a flower garden and every dress a poem. Pictures of scenes in Tokio, which has always been a city of mystery, its side lights, customs and particularly happy people, gave one the feeling that Japan and the Japanese are all that is artistic and desirable from any point of view.

Mr. Whiton's talk in itself was illuminating and went far toward dispelling any false ideas which one may have entertained about the little people of the Far East. His talk was warmly received and his audience was held in enraptured attention throughout the lecture.

Little Miss Van Court Hurt.

Anna the three and a half year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William S. Van Court, of Oak Tree, was the victim of a painful injury yesterday afternoon at her home. While Mrs. Van Court was operating a sewing machine, the little girl, who was playing about the room, made a rush to her mother, and while doing so her hand caught in the machine. The needle partially bore the nail from an index finger and badly lacerated the finger. She was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital this morning where the wound was dressed.

Funeral of Mrs. Stilliger.

Funeral services over the late Mrs. Anna B. Stilliger, of Scotch Plains, were conducted at St. Joseph's church yesterday morning, where a solemn requiem mass was celebrated by the rector, Rev. William H. Miller. Interment was made at St. Mary's cemetery, the bearers being William Lee, Andrew Schaeffer, John Albert, Louis Morel, Charles Eller and George Wahl.

A Progressive Euchre.

Plainfield Council, No. 402, United Commercial Travelers, will hold a progressive euchre on Saturday evening in its council chambers over Drake's Business College. The committee reports a big sale of tickets.

The regular monthly meeting of the Warren chapel Ladies' Missionary and Aid Society will be held Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

SERVANT LOOTED HOUSE

Former Crittenden Home Inmate Suspected of the Theft.

HEERING FAMILY THE VICTIMS.

Almost Everything Movable Is Missing from a Sherman Avenue Residence.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. William Heeron on Serman avenue, just outside the city limits, was completely stripped of valuables shortly after luncheon yesterday afternoon. A servant, Mrs. Margaret Reiger, has disappeared. She is suspected of having taken the booty. This is substantiated by the fact that the servant's old clothes and hats were found at the house, while everything else was taken.

The theft was discovered last night, when Miss Minnie Christofferson, who boards with the Heerons, returned from her work at the Woodhull & Martin Company store. She found the house locked and for a time was unable to get inside. When she did she was amazed to find everything ransacked.

A search through the rooms showed that there had been a general "clean up." The booty included everything in the clothing line, underwear, jewelry, umbrellas, pocketbooks, rings, hats, cloaks, and in fact nothing but the heavy furnishings remained. It is the opinion that a horse and wagon must have been employed to carry the stuff away. There is no clue to the woman's whereabouts, although it is the belief that she will be easily found.

An opportune time was taken to make the theft complete. Mr. Heeron was in Philadelphia on business, while Mrs. Heeron was out of town on a visit and not expected home until last night, and Miss Christofferson was also away from the house during the greater part of the day. She was home for luncheon and everything was all right then. The sudden disappearance of the servant leaves no doubt in the minds of the family that she is the guilty party, and every effort will be made to locate her as soon as possible. Today it was necessary for the family to purchase new clothing before they could leave the house, as all of the necessary wearing apparel was taken.

Mrs. Margaret Reiger, who gave her age as twenty-one years, is a widow, and prior to being engaged by the Heerons a month ago was an inmate of the Crittenden Home in Newark. She was recommended to the Heerons by a friend of the family and she had every appearance of being houest and trustworthy. During her short stay she became strongly attached to the members of the family and she was never suspected of being dishonest.

The robbery was not reported to the Plainfield police, because the family is out of the city, but a member of the household said today that she would take the matter up with the police of Dunellen.

TO TELL OF Y.W.C.A. WORK IN OTHER LANDS

At the Crescent Avenue church prayer-meeting tomorrow evening the exercises will be in charge of the Young Women's Christian Association. Miss Harriet Taylor, national secretary in charge of the foreign department of the Young Women's Christian Association, will speak. She has visited Young Women's Christian associations in fifteen different countries; was one of the American representatives at the World's Christian Student Federation Conference in Japan, attended the missionary centennial in China and has just returned from a five months' tour in South America. About a year and a half ago Miss Taylor spoke at a parlor conference on association work at Mrs. Percy Stuart's residence.

With Miss Taylor will be Miss Maya Das, of Lahne, India. She is a graduate of Mount Holyoke and at present a student in the National Y. W. C. F. Training School in New York city. Miss Maya Das returns to India as the first Indian national secretary. All other secretaries have been either British or American, so she is really the pioneer worker among her own people.

Miss Maya Das will also speak at the Young People's meeting at the First Baptist church.

NOLEN MAY RECOVER THE PHYSICIAN SAYS

George R. Nolen, of East Third street, who has been at the hospital under treatment for concussion of the brain, was reported today as about the same. Nolen, who, it is said, was intoxicated, fell on the sidewalk last Thursday, striking his head. The police were summoned and the man was removed to headquarters, where he was detained over night.

Later an examination was made and it was found that Nolen was suffering from concussion of the brain and was in an unconscious condition. He remained so until yesterday, when he partially regained consciousness. Unless there should be further complications it is the opinion of the physicians that he will recover.

MRS. FLORENCE HOWE HALL LECTURES ON "MANNERS."

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, formerly of this city, and now of New York, who is in Plainfield today, has just returned from a lecture tour. She addressed the students of Miss Sayward's school, at Overbrook, Pa., and those of the Walnut Lane School, Germantown, Pa., on "Manners."

On December 3, Mrs. Hall will address the students of Swarthmore College, Philadelphia, on "The Art of Conversation." In January the gifted woman tours the New England cities. In February, she begins her western lecture tour.

In the Interest of Child Labor.

Invitations have been issued to the residence of Mrs. Thatcher M. Brown, 1027 Park avenue, tomorrow, from 11 a. m. to 9:30 p. m., to view an exhibit in the interest of child labor and sweatshop work, under the auspices of the Consumers' League, of New York. The subject is of vital interest, and the exhibit is being presented in different cities to arouse public sentiment.

Digging Wells Deeper.

The wells at the Plainfield-Union Water Company's plant in the Netherwood section are being sunk deeper. This is made necessary because the rainfall during the last two years has not been up to the record. The present drought is largely responsible for the water company's activities.

Will Form a Senior Order.

A movement is on foot here to form a council of the Senior Order, Jr. O. U. A. M. James E. Church is the moving spirit in the affair and already several men have signed the charter roll. There is practically no difference between the Junior and Senior orders, the objects being almost identical.

DAILY PRESS CARTOONS ARE NOW IN BOOK FORM

The cartoons which appeared daily from early in June to the middle of last month in The Daily Press, have been published in book form by H. B. Thomson, of New York, and are being delivered to the many subscribers in this city. The cartoons, have received such wide-spread commendation and the witty jingles furnished for each by Judge Wm. N. Runyon, are in keeping with the subject of each picture. Many of the cartoons are the work of Peter G. Thomson, of Brooklyn, who is recognized as one of the foremost men in the profession in that city.

The books are being delivered by the compiler and he says that in place of one, in many instances the order has been increased to five copies. The book is handsomely bound in flexible calf and is a masterpiece of the bookbinder's art. Ninety familiar faces are depicted.

POLITICIAN MAY BUY A FAMOUS HOSTELRY

John Harkins, the New Brunswick politician, and former baseball player of note, has taken an option to purchase Thornton's Hotel at New Market. The option it is reported will expire on December 3. The amount of the transaction is said to be close to the $12,000 mark. Mr. Thornton's reason for disposing of the business is due to ill health. The deal is the most important realty transaction in Piscataway township in some years. It is reported that negotiations are practically completed whereby Harkins will take possession of the place on the above named date. Harkins up to five months ago conducted a cafe in New Brunswick, opposite the Pennsylvania railroad station. This he sold for $35,000.

The hotel, was conducted for years by Lloyd Nelson, and previously by the latter's father, is one of the oldest hosterlies in the State. It was erected on the site of an old tavern about 125 years ago which was destroyed by British soldiers during the Revolutionary War period. For years it was known as Nelson's tavern.

John Dent, steward at the Elks' clubhouse, was proprietor of the hosterly about six years ago, when he sold out the business to "Mayor Bill" Smith, when the latter was basking in the limelight, after he received his share of the Fair millions. Smith acted as boniface for only a short period and he later turned the business and property over to his brother-in-law, the present owner and proprietor.

The hosterly is rich in historical history. Ever since its establishment it has been the headquarters for political gatherings and township meetings and elections. In the old days before the ballot box was brought into local elections the citizens of Piscataway township gathered there and voted on public questions by the old colonial standing system. Those voting in the affirmative side of questions would take their position in a line on the right hand of the street while those voting in the negative would line up on the left hand side of the street.

Harkins, the prospective proprietor of the old inn, is well known to Plainfielders and in the world of Elkdom. Ball fans, in the days of the old Crescents in the early '90's will remember how he terrorized the batters of the local team when rivalry was keen in this city and Somerville on the diamond.

It is reported that Harkins intends to make a number of improvements to the hotel and will make a special effort to establish a halfway headquarters for automobilists.

A large assemable of friends attended the funeral service of the late Maurice Shannon which were held in St. Mary's church this morning, where a solemn high requiem mass was celebrated by Father Hogan. Interment was made at St. Mary's cemetery, the casket being borne to the grave by Patrick Muldoon, Edward Smith, James Whelan, James McAvoy, Richard Waldron and Peter Galbraith. Sixteen carriages were in the funeral procession to the cemetery.

A large delegation from Watchung Council, Knights of Columbus, attended the service and the council also gave a beautiful floral tribute. The pall-bearers were Patrick Muldoon, Edward Smith, James Whalen, James McAvoy, Richard Waldron and Peter Galbraith.

CAMPANARI HEARD HERE

Famous Baritone's Only Appearance Outside of Grand Opera.

HANS KRONOLD'S WORK FINE.

Joseph McIntyre Superb as Accompanist—Exceptional Audience Charmed With Program.

For appreciation, enthusiasm and brilliance the audience which crowded the high school auditorium last night to attend the song recital of Signor Guiseppe Campanari, as arranged by Mr. Joseph McIntyre, exceeded all bounds and accorded this great artist a welcome second only to those vouchsafed him when he appears at the Metropolitan Opera House.

When the announcement was first made that Campanari was to appear in Plainfield it was accompanied by the statement that he had forsaken grand opera for the concert stage. This was true; but only yesterday Andreas Dipple, administrating director of the Metropolitan Opera House, realizing the void Campanari's desertion had caused in the ranks of his song birds, re-engaged him and at his own terms. Therefore Campanari's first and last appearance on the concert stage this season was made before a Plainfield audience.

Rarely has an artist received so vociferous a reception and rarely has an artist of Campanari's calibre responded so graciously and good naturedly. Several of his best numbers he repeated, among them, of course, the Toreador song from Carmen which he rendered with all the vim and fire of a victorious bull fighter. Could Calve have but been present to sing its title role Plainfield's cup of happiness would have been full to the brim, for Campanari was at his best.

His repertoire included twelve numbers, many of these were Italian and Spanish songs of the old and modern schools, while three were operatic gems such as "The Serenade," from Don Giovani; "Non pin andrai" from the Marriage of Figaro and the Toreador song. One especially delightful and graceful number was Buzzi-Peccia's "Lolita," and so delightfully was it rendered that after allowing the rapturous applause to subside Camparari sang it again with equal charm and effect. Rarely has this artist appeared to better advantage and it is extremely doubtful if he ever sang to an audience more appreciative.

It had been the purpose of Mr. McIntyre to present to his Plainfield patrons Arthur Lichstein, a young Russian violinist, who recently came to this country heralded as one of Europe's most finished artists. Illness overtook Mr. Lichstein yesterday and at the last moment he telegraphed his regrets. By a stroke of rare good luck Mr. McIntyre communicated with Hans Kronold, the 'cellist, and he consented to appear. No sooner had Kronold caressingly drawn the first few notes from his mellow old instrument than his audience settled back in its chairs, content and well realizing that a fine artist was before it. The reception tendered Kronold was enthusiastic, and he too, was compelled to repeat several of his numbers. Not only is he an artist of ability, but a composer as well, two of his numbers being his own. His "The Religeuse" was sweet and dainty and contained a wealth of exquisite melody, while his "Spinning Wheel" afforded his excellent technique and execution full scope. His concluding number Chopin's Nocturne, was one of the most beautiful of the evening.

After last night's concert, Campanari was enthusiastic in his praises of Joseph McIntyre as an accompanist. He warmed up on his subject when telling how clever the pianist is and declared that he considered Mr. McIntyre the equal of any accompanist he had ever come in contact with. In fact he said that he was the best.

AMONG OUR NEIGHBORS

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The improvements and addition to the Levering and Garrigues plant at West Dunellen are being pushed with rapidity. The alterations represent an expenditure of nearly $150,000 which includes the improved machinery which will be installed in the new structure. The new building will cover a space of about 100x210 feet. Of the new machinery which will be installed is two mammoth electric cranes, which will be two of the largest machines of their kind in commission. These machines will take the place of the huge derricks now in use. At present the company has about 260 workmen on its pay roll, but the increased facilities will swell the enrollment to 600.

Hundreds of rabbits were slain in the vicinity of South Plainfield and Piscataway yesterday. The biggest capture of the day was made by two Perth Amboy hunters, who shot twenty-six bunnies by noon. Landlord Thornton did a rush business and fed more than 100 hunters at dinner.

SOME STATE NEWS BRIEFS

Eli Siman committed suicide Saturday evening, by jumping from Lower Penn's Neck bridge into Salem Creek.

Managers of the proposed steamboat line between Philadelphia and Atlantic City promise to have a vessel in service during the coming week.

Surrogate-elect Bullock, of Mercer county, has notified the present attaches of the surrogate's office that they will be retained in their positions.

Freeholder William J. Thompson, former Mayor John Beaston, Herbert F. Stetser and Marcus Cramer will represent Gloucester City at the deeper waterways convention at Norfolk, Va., this week.

The home of John H. Ward, former director of education, at 34 Kensington avenue, Jersey City, was robbed early Sunday morning. The thieves stole Mr. Ward's frock coat, a Masonic emblem and half a box of cigars.

R. P. Porch and his father, Lorenzo Porch, of Pitman, just returned from Cooper Hospital, Camden. The son was in the institution four months suffering from a broken leg, and the father had a cancer cut from his face.

John G. Whitall, of Thorofare, has a roan horse, twenty-five years old, that has taken a new lease on life. Twice the past week the animal tried to run away, and is doing more hard work than other horses on the farm half its age.

William Goan displayed his nerve Saturday evening when he grabbed a rabid dog that was running through the streets of Gloucester. He carried it to the city hall, where it was killed. The dog, a fox terrier, was bitten by a mad dog a month ago.

Friends are worried over the disappearance of "Dick" Thompson, who roomed within a stone's throw of Jersey City's municipal building, and was an employe of that city's Street and Water Board. He walked out of 1 Montgomery street at midnight about two weeks ago.

In their night clothes and in a semi-conscious condition, Joseph Zbierhezki and his wife and six children were rescued early Sunday morning from their burning home at 819 Kaighn avenue, Camden by the local firemen. All were in a serious way for a time, but they recovered when restoratives were applied.

Former Freeholder William E. H. Rouse, of Mercer county, died suddenly Sunday afternoon at his home in Lawrenceville, after having returned from Trenton, where he came to see a physician regarding an illness which had afflicted him but a short time, and which was declared to be heart disease. He was sixty-one years old.

Dr. Joshua B. Gallaway, pastor of the Third Presbyterian church, Paterson, Saturday afternoon, in the presence of several hundred people, most of whom were members of the congregation, laid the corner-stone of the new building which will be erected on the site of the old home of the congregation, which was destroyed by fire last December.

Contracts for the erection of the Sarah Amelia Quackenbush Memorial Home for Nurses at Paterson will be awarded today by Architect F. W. Wentworth, who drew the plans for the $35,000 building which was made possible through the generosity of Peter Quackenbush. The building is intended as a memorial to the wife of the Main street merchant.

Evan Loper, the seventy-five-year-old tollgate keeper of the Shiloh turnpike, while riding a bicycle on Broad street, Bridgeton, Sunday afternoon, was struck by the big touring car of C. Frank Coxe, a Bridgeton manufacturer, and was seriously injured. Edward Fagan, the chauffeur, in trying to escape a collision, partly wrecked his machine. A passing automobile took Mr. Loper to a physician's office for treatment.

From shock incident to the terrible injuries he sustained Saturday night in a rear-end collision between trolley cars, Roland Perkins, forty years old, of 789 Line street, Camden, died in the Cooper Hospital Sunday. Both feet were crushed, his head was lacerated, and he also suffered internal injuries. Perkins was the motorman of a trailer on the Hudson Heights line, and when a car in front of him stopped at Broadway and Jackson streets, slippery rails prevented Perkins from stopping his car.

Forty feet of a steel chimney, three feet in diameter, fell upon the roof of the Hudson and Manhattan tunnel powerhouse at the foot of York street, near Pier C, Jersey City, Saturday, when the upright of a derrick workmen were using in lowering it broke. Nobody was hurt, and the damage was small. The powerhouse was in service during the construction of the tunnel, and is to be removed. The chimney was one of three of the same diameter and height, sixty feet above the roof in a row. Three trolley cars were stalled in York street at the side of the power-house, and the startled passengers gave thanks that the huge funnel did not come their way.

—The New York Telephone Company has a large gang of employes at work on West Front street erecting new poles and re-arranging the system of wiring.

Now Just a Word About Ourselves

Frederick Mathushek, the founder of our house, was born at the Palace of Manheim, Germany, June 9, 1814. Before he reached the age of seventeen years he had made several improvements in pianos. In 1840 he came to America, where he devoted his life to the manufacture and improvement of the piano-forte. Unselfishly he has given to the world the benefit of his wonderful inventive genius, for many of his valuable inventions were not patented, but were given for the benefit of his craft and will be found embodied in the best makes of pianos throughout the world.

YEAR'S WORK OF Y.M.C.A.

The Activities in the Various Departments are Reported in Detail.

BY SECRETARY H. E. PARKER.

Religious, Physical, Educational, Social and Boys' Sections Are Stated in Full.

The following report was read in the churches participating in the anniversary celebration of yesterday:

Because of the close and helpful relation in which the churches stand to the Young Men's Christian Association, it is fitting that on this forty-second anniversary occasion we should express to you our appreciation of the leadership and support you have furnished us, and that we should report to you some of the achievements you have thus helped to make possible.

Religious Work.

During the year, sixty-six men and fifty boys have been enrolled in the Bible classes. The work of the Plainfield High School Boys' Class, taught by Mr. Murray, was particularly gratifying. The principal of the school has stated that the influence of this class was such as to raise the moral tone of the entire student body. Several of the members of this class have become Bible class teachers.

The Sunday meetings of the year had an average attendance of 119.

It is one of the functions of the Association's religious department to promote the extension of association ideals and methods among the young men of other lands. Aided by the generous co-operation of two friends, we are now providing the salary of a foreign representative, Mr. A. C. Hull, recently appointed Secretary of the Association at Santiago, Chile. Much as we need the association here, the odds against Christian life and activity are much heavier there, and such an organization as the Association is a mighty ally to the Latin American young man in his fight for character. Splendid results have already been achieved by Mr. Hull and his associates. With them, decisions for the Christian life are of most daily occurrence.

Another new enterprise undertaken during the year, in connection with our religious work, was the bringing of Dr. Lyman B. Sperry to Plainfield. Dr. Sperry is the most eminent lecturer in the country on personal and social problems growing out of sex relationships, and his plain, searching and instructive talks had in them an immeasurable character-building power. Especially was this true of his talks on the significance of sex and the dangers of narcotics given to all the boys of the two high schools.

Physical Department Activities.

We are now entering on the best season in the history of our physical department. Two hundred and sixty-two men and boys are making use of its privileges. Nearly two hundred men and boys are enrolled on amateur athletic teams. The extension work of the department has continued to grow in strength and value. In the Plainfield Sunday School Athletic League, organized and directed by the association physical director, Mr. Listman, nine Sunday Schools, represented by two hundred and fifty boys, are enrolled. Eighty high school boys will participate in intercscholastic contests to be held in the gymnasium during the season.

An eight-acre athletic field has been acquired by the association. This will be developed as a playground and athletic park for the boys of the city as soon as the necessary funds may be secured. The possession of such a field will enable the association to exercise a wholesome controlling influence in outdoor sports.

Educational Work.

The evening classes maintained during the past year included Mechanical Drawing, orchestra and English for Italian speaking men. These groups had a combined enrollment of fifty-six men, each doing excellent work. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. M. A. Korff, has given a series of free conceris with a total attendance of 2,500. In addition, it furnished music for the Lincoln's Birthday celebration and the Fourth of July celebration.

Boys' Work.

Both the scope and the efficiency of the work of this department have been increased under the direction of its new secretary, Mr. Bingeman. Besides the usual work with school boys in the membership, the association has undertaken to meet the needs of a large class of boys outside the membership who can not join because they are unable to pay even the small fee charged. On two evenings a week, under the supervision of two of the secretaries, a group of twenty-five are allowed the use of all the association privileges. This is preventive work of the most valuable kind, inasmuch as the majority of juvenile delinquents come from the class thus cared for. In a few cases, "big brother" for delinquent boys have been found; the rescue of two boys in this way has been effected.

The boys in the membership, now numbering 131, are better cared for than ever before. With adequate supervision at all times, brigthened and newly equipped game and reading rooms, improved locker facilities affording absolute security, and an interesting program of wholesome amusement, athletic enjoyment and service, the department is worthy of the loyal interest of any boy and the fullest confidence of any parent.

Social Work.

Not the least of the privileges offered by the association to its 623 members is that of friendship with men and boys who are worth knowing. The association recognizes the determining influence of fellowship in the building of character, and offers many opportunities for it in connection with the work of its organized groups and classes, and thru informal suppers, socials, and other gatherins. Through the co-operation of the Ladies' Auxiliary, the association parlor has been entirely re-furnished. This room, with its fine open fireplace, is always open to all senor members and is also used frequently as a meeting place by committees and board of other organizations.

Association Support.

The results reported would not have been possible without liberal support on the part of many Christian men and women. The association could not maintain an effective work if it were to depend solely upon the limited resources of its members. Its necessities, however, are not those of a club conducted for the profit and enjoyment of its members, but those of a Christian enterprise serving the young men and boys of the city. Giving to the association's work is, therefore, a Christian service and this support is accompanied by the prayer that whenever its needs are presented to you, they may have the consideration they deserve.

HERBERT E. PARKER,
General Secretary.

The Women's Society for Christian Work of the Seventh-Day Baptist church will meet for sewing in the church parlors tomorrow afternoon. The society hopes to pack a barrel soon and asks that all those who have garments to dispose of will save them for this purpose.

The annual turkey supper will be held at the Seventh-Day Baptist church tomorrow night from 6 to 8 o'clock. An informal program will follow.

STATE GAINS $35,000 BY HUNTERS' LICENSES

The State Fish and Game Commissioners are more than pleased at the working of the new law requiring a license fee of $1 for a resident gunner to go afield for game, the season opening yesterday for this sport.

There has already been received in the State treasury over $11,000 from these licenses, and as the rabbit season opened all over the State yesterday, and as interest in the licenses has been intense lately, it is expected that when the returns for the month are in there will be received more than twice the $11,000 now accounted for.

In all, the commissioners believe there will be received from this source a revenue of $35,000. This money is clear gain to the State, nothing of the kind having been heretofore received, and its receipt would indicate that the commissioners knew what they were talking about when they told the legislators that if the law was passed the State would get a revenue which would go far towards supporting the fish and game commission and stocking the State with game and fish.

The commission in the State House supplies the county clerks with blank licenses, those officials in turn supplying the municipal clerks, so that it is an easy thing to get a license. Because of this system it is impossible to now tell how much money will be received, but it is believed that the amount will not fall short of $35,000, and this is all clear gain to the State.

CLEAN $40,000 FROM RICH ORE CRUSHING.

A great crushing of gold ore has just been finished in Nevada City, Cal. It was in progress for two days and more than $400,000 worth of amalygam was secured. Last night the specimens of ore from the Sixteen to One mine which have lain in the vaults of a bank in Nevada City for several months were crushed and reduced at the customs mill, which was heavily guarded.

E. H. Wilson, manager of the mine, brought sixty sacks to Nevada City for safe keeping. It is stated that the rock was so rich the mill was forced to stop hourly to allow the batteries to be cleaned, immense quantities of amalgam clogging them.

JUMP FROM A TRAIN NEARLY COST HIS LIFE.

While trying to save time of walking from the Clinton Street Station, Trenton, to the home of some friends, Harry Robinoughtsch, twenty-one years old, of Beatty street and Smith avenue, jumped from a passenger train in South Trenton Sunday night and was hurt. Besides having one toe cut off, he sustained a crushed foot, lacerations of the hands and head and was badly shaken up. That he escaped instant death was miraculous.

At the train near Trenton Robinourtsch decided to jump off somewhere in South Trenton. At the Jersey side of the Delaware bridge the engineer slackened his speed.

Robinourtsch ran to the platform while the train was yet running at a good rate of speed. He held fast to the iron railing alongside the steps and tried to step off. He slipped, and one foot went under the wheel and was crushed.

The pain caused him to loosen his hold, and he jumped and rolled close to the tracks. When the train passed called for help, but no one responded to his appeal. With one shoe torn off, he managed to crawl down the embankment to a cigar store on South Warren street. With blood flowing down his face and his mangled foot showing, he hobbled into the store and badly frightened a number of customers.

A little later he was removed to his home.

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

The parish fair of the Sacred Heart church closed last night. The fair was successful netting about $925. The contest between John Horan and Frank Gieski was won by Mr. Horan, who collected $240.01. Mr. Gieski collected $63. The prize, a handsome gold watch, was presented to Mr. Horan by the Rev. John Baldwin, pastor of the church.

A new schedule has been adopted by the Plainfield Auto-'Bus Co. and went into effect yesterday. By this schedule twelve trips will be made to South Plainfield and five to Metuchen.

HUNTERS OUT IN FORCE

First Day Slaughter of the Rabbit is Herewith Recorded.

GUNNERS ARE IN GOOD LUCK.

Returning Sportsmen Tell Their Tales of Success—The Rabbits Are Very Plentiful.

"Hunting was never better," is the general verdict of local sportsmen who shouldered their guns and went out for game yesterday. There was another big exodus this morning and the indications are that the supply of rabbits and game will continue for a least a week. In past seasons there has been "little doing" after the first day's slaughter, but the conditions are different this season.

Harry Dreier's store, which is local headquarters for sportsmen, was filled with enthusiastic gunners last night, who returned with good "catches" and a good stock of yarns. In the course of the day a couple of freak occurrences were reported. At South Plainfield Harry Dreier had the misfortune of a rabbit getting away after having its two hind legs banged off; Percy Culver, of the borough fire department, distinguished himself by shooting two rabbits on a single shot, with a party of friends in the morning.

Two New York gunners, who had been boarding for a couple of days at Mt. Horeb, got lost in the mountains and were unable to find their way back to the boarding house. At Martinsville they encountered Chauncey F. Colthar and John D. Roberts, of the borough, and asked for assistance. They had forgotten the name of the farmhouse at which they were stopping, but they extricated themselves from their predicament, by getting on the main road to Bound Brook, to which place they walked, and took a train to the metropolis.

Harry Dreier, who keeps tabs on the situation, said to a Daily Press reporter today: "Rabbits were never more plentiful, there never were so many squirrel and partridge. Quail, however, is scarce. With a full moon and a spell of snappy weather the woodcock will be in thick." Some of the catches registered yesterday follow:

Charles Maltby and Judd Giles, seven quail, five woodcock and one rabbit, at South Plainfield.

Jack Mowery and Ed Starbuck, five quail and six rabbits, at South Plainfield.

Samuel Adams, Alvie Sutherlein and Harry Dreier, eight rabbits, one woodcock, at South Plainfield.

Chauncey F. Colthar and John D. Roberts, nine rabbits, at Martinsville.

Arthur Fritz and Frank Moncton, ten rabbits, one partridge, one woodcock and one squirrel, on the Watchung mountains.

Charles Mercier, Lewis and Chas. Bimble, twenty-five rabbits and one woodcock, at Martinsville.

Captain Fredericks and party, ten rabbits, at Short Hills.

Fred Bock, Fred Allen, Charles Allen, William Newmiller, twenty-four rabbits and two squirrels, at Martinsville.

Spiel Walsh and Lew Cregier, eighteen rabbits, one woodcock, at Short Hills.

Lemuel Gallaway, nine rabbits, at Warrenville.

When Townley, five rabbits, at Liberty Corner.

Dr. J. Harvey Buchanan and Wilbur Randolph, fifteen rabbits, at Washington.

Frank Marsh, Joseph Newman, Percy Culver and Otto Ruppert, twenty rabbits, two woodcock, in Cooper's woods, on first and second mountain.

A party of seven, which included Bryant and William Randolph, Orva Freeman and Fred Stover, of Oak Tree, bagged 103 cottontails at Three Bridges. In the party were also three sportsmen from Three Bridges.

TRAINS PLOW THROUGH LAKE.

Trains on the Central Railroad of New Jersey ran through several feet of water Sunday as they passed the Communipaw Avenue Station, Jersey City, as the result of a bursted water main. As each train passed a cloud of steam arose and thousands of spectators watched the big passenger engines plowing through the water.

The local water authorities were notified and the nearest water gate was shut off, but not until a large lake was formed in the cut. The trouble was caused by the employes of the railroad company. At the Communipaw avenue crossing the company in order to widen its roadbed shifted the bridge about a hundred feet north of the old street line and widened the road about five feet more at that point. A water main was laid over the new bridge, but the water was not shut off. Sunday afternoon the railroad company was operating a huge steam shovel at the crossing and while operating the shovel picked up the old water main and snapped it as if it had been a pipe stem.

RETURNED TO AID IN WEEK OF CELEBRATION

Addresses last night by seven former pastors was the feature of the week of celebration, which began Sunday in the Methodist church of Springfield township, in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of its dedication. Among the former pastors who spoke was Rev. William P. Searls, now in charge of the Methodist church at Ossining, N. Y., who was at the Springfield church from 1864 to 1870.

Rev. Mr. Searle's successor, Rev. John E. Hancock, now stationed at Basking Ridge, who was pastor of the Springfield church from 1870 to 1872, will also be among the speakers, as will Rev. Samuel P. Lacey, retired, of Newark, pastor from 1879 to 1881; Rev. Dr. William A. Knox, of Dunellen, pastor from 1893 to 1897; Rev. Christopher H. Von Glahn, of Hackensack, who was in charge from 1898 to 1901; Rev. Dr. John H. Egbert, of Irvington, who served from 1902 to 1906, and Rev. Henry C. Thompson, who was in charge from 1906 until early last year when Rev. Frederick B. Curry, the present pastor, succeeded him.

The celebration, which will close next Sunday night, began Sunday morning with a sermon by Rev. Dr. William V. Kelley, editor of The Methodist Review, of New York. Dr. Kelley's topic was, "Did not our heart burn within us as He talked with us by the way?" At the evening services Rev. Dr. Jesse L. Hurlbut, district superintendent, occupied the pulpit. After the latter service the new organ, installed recently at a cost of $1,800, was formally dedicated. The church was taxed to its capacity at both services.

A prominent figure at the services was Ambrose Reeve, the oldest living member of the church. Mr. Reeve is seventy-six years of age and has been a member of the Springfield church since 1860. He joined the church while a resident of Maplewood, it having been the only Methodist house of worship in the vicinity at that time. Mr. Reeve has since moved to Springfield, where he has a home on Main street. He is a trustee and steward of the church and for twenty-five years was its treasurer. A. L. Burd is now treasurer. William W. McCollum is president of the board of trustees.

WINTER IS ON THE WAY, SAYS WEATHER BUREAU.

Rain, snow and disagreeable weather throughout the country generally, and frost in the Gulf and South Atlantic States during the next week or ten days, was the prediction of the weather bureau yesterday. Cooler weather is indicated for the Eastern portion of the country during this time.

Two disturbances are approaching the West. These will be attended by rain in the southern and snow in the northern districts. The first disturbance will advance from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic coast, starting today in the West and reaching the Atlantic States about Thursday or Friday. The second storm will start on its cross-country run from the Pacific coast about Wednesday and is due to reach the Atlantic seaboard about Monday next. Following these disturbances the frost line probably will be carried into the Gulf and South Atlantic States, the weather forecasters declare.

PLAN GENERAL STRIKE AS SENTENCE PROTEST.

Plans for a general strike of wage-earners throughout the country for a period of two weeks, beginning on the day the officers of the American Federation of Labor are imprisoned for contempt of court, were suggested in Philadelphia, yesterday at a meeting of the Central Labor Union. Resolutions favoring the scheme were unanimously adopted by the union, which represents about 75,000 workers in many lines of employment.

Copies of the resolutions were sent to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, now in session in Toronto, Canada, and it was decided to appoint a committee of five to perfect plans by which organized and unorganized wage-workers would unite to make the strike effective.

NEW COUNCIL, K. OF C.

Hundreds of members of the Knights of Columbus hailing from all parts of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, participated Sunday afternoon in the institution of Santa Maria Council, No. 1443, at Haddon Heights. Benediction was given at the Church of St. Rose of Lima, by Rev. M. E. Bric, of the Sacred Heart church, Camden, assisted by Rev. Alfred Scully, of Gloucester City, and Rev. Joseph Egan, of Hadden Heights.

Sixty members were taken into the council as organized by District Deputy James T. Cassidy, of Camden. Following these exercises a banquet was held in the lower floor of the hall, the toastmaster being S. C. Connell, of Burlington. The officers of the new council are: Grand knight, F. A. Finnigan; deputy, C. F. Reigert; financial secretary, W. F. Kramer; recording secretary, F. C. Gerdleman; chaplain and treasurer, Rev. Father Egan.

FINE OF $100 FOR RED BANK SOCIALIST

Edward M. Myer, a Red Bank Socialist, was fined $100 by Judge Cross in the United States District Court yesterday for illegal use of the United States mails. About a year ago a Socialist editor in Kansas was convicted by a jury for a like offense.

After Myer learned of the conviction he sent defamatory postal cards to each member of the convicting jury. On each of the cards appeared the names of the jurors, headed by such famed traitors as Judas Iscariot and Benedict Arnold. These postals also contained the expression; "A fine bunch."

Myer told the jurors on the cards that he had made out a list of the names in duplicate so that he might have it in his room to look at before going to bed each night. That he received so mild a sentence was due to a number of letters from prominent Red Bank residents attesting his past good reputation.

Edward Myer is the inventor of an aeroplane with which he has made three unsuccessful flights. He is identified with the Socialist party, and is one of the local party leaders.

AUTOMOBILISTS INSPECT CONDITION OF ROADS.

An impromptu meeting of automobile owners and drivers was held at the Hotel Windsor, Washington, yesterday, at which there was considerable discussion over the condition of the roads in Sussex and Warren counties. As a result of the meeting the attention of the Boards of Freeholders of both counties, and incidentally that of the good roads associations and automobile clubs, will be called to road conditions.

Some of those in the party were Judge David W. Lawrence, of Jersey City and Swartswood; Dr. P. W. Levering, of Atlantic City; F. W. Bietz, of Jersey City; James Burns, of Dingmans Ferry, and others. It appears that the last named had just completed an extensive tour across the State and down the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware. They reported many excellent stretches of good road, but found that the connecting roads were in bad condition.

The road from Swartswood to Newton could be greatly improved at small expenditure by a little blasting of rock at some of the sharp turns, and grading would open up to New Jersey automobilists the excellent shade roads of Pennsylvania. Upon leaving the Branchville road for Dingmans Ferry, the descent might be made more easy and at present is really dangerous.

This party returned to New Jersey crossing the Delaware at Phillipsburg and reported the turnpike in splendid condition up to and for a distance beyond Washington. The road becomes dangerous again and in need of grading at German Valley for a distance of several miles, until the Morristown road is reached, after which better conditions prevail.

Albert Cable, proprietor of the Windsor, tendered the gathering of automobilists a banquet, and as a result of the meeting a complete report of the condition of the various roads in that section will be forwarded to the State Road Commission and the Boards of Freeholders.

ASKS CANNON TO PROVE CHARGE AGAINST RIDDER.

A demand has been made on Speaker Cannon to furnish the names of the men whom, he says, with Herman Ridder, offered to pledge certain metropolitan newspapers to boom him for the Presidency if he would use his influence to have the duty on white print paper removed. The charge was made by Speaker Cannon at a banquet in Bloomington, Ill., and was his explanation of the criticisms of his public acts.

Mr. Ridder was interested in the tariff on white paper as president of the American Publishers' Association. He yesterday characterized the charge as both false and ridiculous, and now insists that Speaker Cannon make known the names of the members of the delegation whom he claims were present when the offer was made.

"Cannon must be crazy to make such an absurd statement,' said Mr. Ridder. "The story is absolutely false and ridiculous. I did not pledge him the support even of my own paper, and never talked to him about securing newspapers' support in any shape or manner. If I went to him in the Speaker's room, accompanied by certain representatives of metropolitan newspapers, as he says, and made the offer that he claims I made, let Speaker Cannon make public the names of these men who were the witnesses."

much herself. It was her brother that put me on the downslide."

"Her brother?"

"Yes, the brother of the girl Philip is going to marry—this stuckup nurse! I've a good mind to tell Philip."

"Her brother is not her fault."

"No, I suppose he's mine. But I am going to tell him."

"Do you think that would be fair?"

"All's fair in love."

Haggleton looked at the firmly closed mouth and doubted his ability to persuade her.

"You know I like you very much?" he asked.

She nodded.

"And I admire you, Jenny, for your pluck and your honesty. You are a good woman notwithstanding what is behind you—a fine woman. Are you going to do a mean thing and disappoint me?"

"Is it mean?" she asked.

"You know it is. You will lower yourself in your own eyes and in the eyes of all of us. It would be unworthy of you."

Jenny sat silent.

"I won't tell,' she finally said. "I will play fair. I do it only for your sake."

"You do it because you are the fine woman I knew you were."

He bent forward and kissed her lightly on the cheek. She furtively wiped her eyes.

"But I am going to fight for my other Philip to the end," she declared defiantly, "just as you are going to fight for yours."

"That's understood. Now, Jenny, something else. When this bakeshop scheme comes off you'll get eight a week. We're going to brighten up your life and your father's."

"There is only one thing that can brighten up my life, and father—well, he has no hope for the future."

"Ah, yes, he failed in business?"

"He had an oil business in Iowa. But the trust couldn't let us go by. John J.'s wagons undersold us at our own door. Now father is a helper in a cellar bakeshop."

"That is the law of business, Jenny—the survival of the fittest."

"Yes, I suppose so. But it's hard to prove that to those who don't fit."

CHAPTER X.

THE BATTLE'S ON.

"GENTLE knocked and entered. "Ah, how is Mr. Gentle," said Haggleton, putting down his hat again, "and what brings him here?"

"I'll come right to the point, Mr.—Mr. Jackson." Gentle glanced around him cautiously. "I want to have it out with you before Philip comes in."

"I expect him later on to report on our bakeshop organization."

"Ah! And you ask what the trouble is! There you have it! We have nothing but bakeshops here, nothing but schemes for making money. I wanted you to study the problems of poverty with Philip"—

"Pardon me. That was not our arrangement. Understand, I am a poor man hustling for a living."

"A poor man! It's a wonder no one has recognized you yet!"

"The newspapers say I am away on my yacht. Nobody knows that I'm down here; nobody is looking for me."

"But Philip knows."

"Philip will be silent."

"That's the trouble, Mr. Haggleton. He's too much interested."

"The use of it is that it will help me to win my son. And he is worth winning. Besides, it has another use—as an object lesson to all you kickers. Look at this room and think what it was."

Haggleton looked significantly around at the evidence of his driving power. His eye stopped at the two windows facing the East river, with their view of Brooklyn bridge.

"By the way," he asked, "what's the matter with joining these two little windows into one large observation window? We shall have the finest view in the city."

"What about the landlord?" asked Gentle.

"The landlord never objects to improvements in the property if the tenant pays for them. We'll pay for that window."

"Philip is demoralized," grumbled Gentle.

"Mr. Gentle, you are just getting acquainted with him. He's my son."

"He is fascinated by the idea that John J. Haggleton is doing this extraordinary thing."

"Just so, Mr. Gentle. And he will be more fascinated when he knows why John J. Haggleton undertook to do it."

"It was a clever move."

"No. It has turned out to be a clever move. I am gaining ground with the boy every day, but that's not why I am doing it. I am sixty years old, Mr. Gentle, and used to my comforts. Do you think I'd stand all this because it was a clever move? No, sir! I stayed down here on account of a few little words that my son fired at me. He looked me straight in the eyes and said, 'You've got to do your own loving yourself.' Heavens! That hit me hard! I'm not getting sentimental. I'm going to fight you for all I'm worth, Mr. Gentle, but when you've played your last card and told my boy the worst you can tell about me, then, anyhow, he's got to know that his father came down here and lived in a tenement"—

He stopped a moment.

"Because his father wanted to do his own loving himself."

"Yet you would influence him to be hard and selfish."

"I want him to be a fine business man."

"And I," rejoined Gentle slowly, "want him to be a fine man."

"H'm! I don't expect my son to be a business man and nothing else. I'm glad to have him study these problems of poverty. All I ask is that you and he be reasonable. Suppose we draw up a plan that will satisfy all of us. I'll put up one million, two millions, five millions, if we can work out some sound scheme of public betterment."

"Five millions?" gasped Gentle.

"Yes, sir, five millions. And I should want the work of carrying out such a scheme, the executive work, to be in your hands."

Gentle reflected. It was a great chance for him, and—what touched him far more—a great chance for the poor. What could he not do with so much money? A sudden thought struck Gentle. Oh, ho, here was the nigger in the wood pile. John J. was John J still.

"Then Philip would know his father?"

"Of course."

"And his mother? What about her?"

Haggleton was ready for him. He never made a proposition without having prepared it in all details, foreseen all objections. So now he answered readily:

"We will tell Philip that there was trouble years ago between his mother and me. I'll admit that I was much in the wrong—absorbed in business; too keen about money. That ought to fix it."

"Oh, no, not with Philip. It is too vague. He must know exactly what the trouble was."

"Out with it!" exclaimed Haggleton.

"You mean that Philip must see that statement."

"I mean that justice must be done to a noble woman."

But Haggleton presented his arguments with restrained vehemence.

"You talk about my wife and the wrong I did. I can't atone to her, can I? For she is dead! If I atone to anybody I've got to pay to the living, have I not? After all, that was what his mother wanted—to have Philip do good with my money. Now he'll do more good than she ever dreamed of. I'll put aside—what did I say? Five millions? I'll put aside ten millions for a great battle against poverty!"

"Ten millions!"

"Ten millions, but not one dollar unless I get my son."

"There still remains your wife's statement," said Gentle.

"You are bound by your promise to see her wish carried out, are you not?" argued Haggleton. "Now, if it is accomplished without the statement"—

"See! You think that I ought to destroy it?"

"Don't you?"

Haggleton followed up the advantage already won.

"You have considered yourself and my dead wife in the matter," he pointed out. "But what about Philip? Suppose he preferred not to see this statement—suppose he hesitated? You would advise against it, would you not?"

"In the circumstances I—I think I would."

Haggleton bent, held out his hand.

"Then we'll leave it to him," he concluded, "but not until I say the word."

Gentle nodded assent. The practical man of affairs had shown him how to carry out the dead woman's wishes without unnecessary harm to the living.

Philip entered.

"Well, did you succeed?" asked Haggleton, watching Gentle out of the corner of his eye.

"Indeed I did," exulted the young man. "I got the kneading machine on credit with a hundred dollars paid down."

"And how about the flour?"

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Dr. Jerrold Shepard's new play, which Daniel Sully will offer at the Plainfield theatre on November 17, there are only eight characters, but each is a distinct and vivid character study both in appearance and conception. To properly present such widely differing and pronounced types Mr. Sully selected his cast from over two hundred applicants, making it an absolute requisite that each member of his company should be an actual physical duplicate of the part as conceived by the author. As a resule of this care, there is a complete naturalness, an entire absence of staginess and the too apparent "make-up" which gives to many productions an appearance of unreality.

The Brothers Byrne open at the Plainfield theatre, matinee and night, November 20. The Byrnes are expert acrobats and although a capable company fills in the minor parts the balance of the fun making falls upon the quartette who are a host in themselves. There are a number of comical situations throughout the piece, notably the trick coach and the steamship interior which rolls most naturally during the entire act. In the last act, the John Byrne troupe of acrobats appear as statuary, and perform some excellent acts in tumbling, as well as posing in picturesque groups. The many humorously funny situations throughout the whole performance create the most laughable effects imaginable.

There is something particularly fascinating about the monster 12-inch guns of a modern battleship. It is the fascination that comes from a sense of their untold power which hurls a shell weighing nearly half a ton for a distance of ten miles and even then puts it through nine inches of armor plate. When these guns are silent they inspire awe. But when in action they inspire a fear that makes the most courageous keep at a safe distance. That is why no moving pictures have ever been secured until Lyman H. Howe finally found a photographer daring enough to join the "man behind the gun" simply to show the audience in the Plainfield theatre, Friday night, November 19, what that man sees when these giant guns hurl shells that can sink a warship or ruin a nation. The pictures are so startling that every spectator can rest assured of a real sensation.

Elsie Ferguson, newest and youngest of New York stars, will appear at the Plainfield theatre Monday evening, November 22. Miss Ferguson startled New York play-goers by her sudden rise to stardom within a week from her first appearance in "Such a Little Queen," and has since been packing the beautiful Hackett theatre at every performance. The New York run covered four consecutive months and proved to be one of the biggest surprises on Broadway. Henry B. Harris, the producer of the play, has surrounded Miss Ferguson with a company of notable players, including Frank Gilmore, Ralph Stuart, Francis Byrne, Eleanor Lawson, George W. Barnum, Louis R. Grisel, Stanley G. Wood, Marion Little, Jessie Ralph, A. W. Neuendorf, Kraft Walton, Arthur A. Klein, Gertrude and William Cahan.

CHINA MISSIONS WORTHY

Dr. Mary Carleton and Miss Jennie Hughes Tell Experiences.

EVANGELICAL WORK GOOD.

Medical Missionaries Co-operate With Bible Teachers and Make Progress.

At the afternoon session of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Elizabeth district, in the Monroe Avenue M. E. church yesterday, two missionaries from China, Dr. Mary Carleton and Miss Jennie Hughes, formerly of Trenton, spoke. Dr. Carleton passed the last 22 years among the Chinese as a medical missionary and her tales of conditions now as compared with former years show a wonderful change in the attitude of the Mongolians toward the Western races.

Dr. Carleton amused her audience for a few minutes in telling them what had been her experience in counteracting the effects of the superstitious doctrine of so called medicine men or priests of China. But, she said, there is so much to be learned from the Chinese that we Americans apparently are away behind the times in our notions of what may be done in the way of healing, provided, of course, we believe in our doctor.

No science of medicine is practised by the Chinese, what they do have is a superabundant superstition. The priests are called just as often as the doctor, and ninety-five times in a hundred the priest's advice is taken in preference to that of the medical man or woman. Their treatment consists of attempts to keep away the "evil spirits," which are constantly surrounding the sick person rather than the administration of the proper medicine. Of this latter few if any have any proper knowledge.

Surgery is a science which stands by itself and the native surgeon thinks his work well done when he has cut o the shaft of an arrow while the head is still emberred in the flesh of the patient. Here is where Western methods get the practitioner into trouble. A woman who had attempted suicide by cutting her throat, was brought to Dr. Carleton with the positive instructions that the throat should be sewed up. Dr. Carleton thought that it would not do to sew the injury and sad it would be necessary to insert a siver tube and sew the lacerated ligaments around the tube. The family of the woman would not stand for that because "silver tubes are not fashionable" in China. When she told the family that the method suggested for saving the woman's life was the only feasible one, the male members of the decided that they would pursue their own methods and called in a cobbler to do the stitching. This completed the work which the unfortunate woman had started out to do and she choked to death immediately after the operation.

Many other instances of the cruel practises of the Chinese father and brother were graphically described including the methods in vogue of scaring away the evil spirits. The greatest work that has been accomplished in this immense country is that done by the medical missionary. They combine the Gospel with their labors of restoring the sick and injured and China is beginning to have a greater faith in this class of missionaries than in any other. The effects of the work can best be seen in the hospitals established by all denominations and to this alone may be attributed the success of work among the idol worshippers.

Relating her experience with a native doctor, Dr. Carleton was asked one day what crime she had committed that she should be banished from her native land. Of course, the answer can only be conjectured as it was not vouchsafed by the lecturer. The Chnese belief would indicate that she must have been dreadfully bad to have had to go to China to explate her sin. Other things of interest held the attention of the 200 delegates until a late hour yesterday afternoon. Miss Jennie Hughes, a young missionary, who went to China nearly five years ago, took up the story where Dr. Carleton left off and told of the struggles in the ministrations to the spiritual welfare of the country to which she is devoting her life. According to her tale the mission to the Chinese is a success regardless of the criticisms constantly being hurled at the missionaries and their supporters.

Miss Jennie Hughes, who is an evangelistic missionary supported in part by the women of the Elizabeth district, said she did not believe that the medical missionary was one bit more happy in her work than the evangelistic missionary. Their work is carried on in most intimate co-

MRS. RUNYON READS INTERESTING PAPER

A paper of unusual interest, entitled "Transforming the Desert," was presented by Mrs. Frank W. Runyon at the meeting of the Home Missionary Society of the First Baptist church held yesterday afternoon in the lecture room. She told of the early migration to the West of pioneers, lured by gold and the desire to make homes in a new country. She also described later efforts to irrigate the arid lands and reclaim the desert plains that cvover many millions of acres. Private enterprise being compelled to abandon these attempts because of their great expense. She told how the national government had successfully undertaken the work of irrigation and reclamation of the barren wastes.

The rapid growth of towns and cities almost phenomenal, Mrs. Runyon said gave wonderful missionary opportunities. The ambitions home makers of the West must be taugt and no one could predict what awaits the church in money and in men if the missionary societies avail themselves of their opportunity to teach the Gospel of Christ.

The paper was preceded by a devotional service, led by Mrs. Calvin Boice.

MIDDLEBROOK CHAPTER HOLDS MEETING HERE

Mrs. William E. MacClymont, of Woodbine avenue, entertained Middlebrook Chapter, Daughters American Revolution, of which she is a member, at her home yesterday afternoon. It was the regular meeting of the chapter and Mrs. MacClymont invited the members to meet at her home. Mrs. M. C. Thomas, regent of the chapter, presided at the business session.

There were about thirty members present to enjoy the hospitality of Mrs. MacClymont. The home was attractively decorated with American flags, and during the serving of refreshments, patriotic music was rendered to the enjoyment of the guests.

Middlebrook Chapter is one of the strongest in the State. Ten meetings are held every year and the officers are unusually active in preparing a fine program at each one. The December meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. C. E. Westervelt on Putnam avenue.

M. C. DOBBINS ESTATE GOES TO THE FAMILY.

The will of the late Matthias C. Dobbins, who died at his home on Elmwood place, Sunday, October 31, was offered for probate in the office of Surrogate T. Parrot at Elizabeth, yesterday afternoon. The will names the widow, Mrs. Ann Eliza Dobbins and the testator's only son, Walter C. Dobbins, executrix and executor of the estate.

Practically the whole estate, which includes the residential property at 117 Elmwood place, is left to the widow, after making a few minor bequests. According to the testator's wish, the cigar and tobacco business conducted by him for so many years in this city, is to be disposed of to the best advantage.

Lem Jennings a Benedict.

Friends of Lemuel Jennings, son of Assistant Fire Chief Andrew Jennings, will be pleased to learn that the former joined the ranks of the Benedicts in Cleveland about a year ago. The bride was an estimable young woman of the Forest City, where the couple are now living. Mr. Jennings is a machinist by trade and he is at present employed in a large Cleveland shop. He left this city about three years ago and after traveling through the West considerably he decided to settle down in Cleveland.

Mr. Fisk Toastmaster.

The borough school re-opened today after a two-day recess because of the meeting of the Somerset County Teachers' Institute at Somerville yesterday and on Monday.

CAN'T CHANGE RATABLES

Court of Errors Confirms Decision in Kenilworth Borough Case.

THE DELAY WAS FATAL.

Should Have Made Objection Promptly to the County Board of Taxes.

The delay on the part of the Borough officials of Kenilworth is held to be the cause of their losing their suit for a readjustment of the ratables in that borough and the decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals handed down yesterday confirms the opinion of Judge Minturn of the Supreme Court and means that the borough board had no case after letting the matter go so long that no possible error could have occurred when the assessments were confirmed by them and allowed to stand without protest.

Codington & Swackhamer, of this city, were counsel for the Union County Board of Taxation and the matter was threshed out thoroughly in the lower courts before being taken to the Supreme Court. The notable feature of the case is that Governor J. Franklin Fort was the counsel for the borough of Kenilworth and was worsted in the arguments, both by brief or orally, by the counsel for the county.

Kenilworth, through its counsel, Governor Fort, asked to have eliminated from its total taxable valuations $322,754. The decision of the court was that many taxpayers were aggrieved by the valuation of their property and prayed for the reductions which have been denied by the courts. The borough board jumped over the head of the county board and took up the matter with the State board, clearly a wrong way as the court says. Justice Swayze in rendering his decision said that the borough failed to object to the apportionment of taxes by the county board of taxation before that board.

Fairness to the other municipalities in the county and the orderly administration of the tax laws, requires that a municipality should object promptly if it questions the return of ratables. This Kenilworth failed to do. Messrs. Codington & Swackhamer were busy receiving congratulations on their success this morning.

REV. DR. C. E. HERRING PICTURES PALESTINE

Rev. Dr. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Baptist church, who, with Mrs. Herring, took an extended trip abroad last summer, gave the first of a series of three illustrated lectures on "Palestine" in the church last night. There was a large audience present and nothing but words of praise were heard concerning the delightful talk and the beautiful views shown by Dr. Herring.

The doctor has the happy faculty of describing his travels in an entertaining manner and held the close attention of all for an hour and a quarter.

Dr. Herring displayed in all last night sixty-five fine views, the majority of which were reproductions of pictures taken by himself abroad. They gave all an excellent idea of the country traveled. The speaker started at Jaffa and then spent the greater part of the evening going through Jerusalem, describing scenes and incidents in and around the city; passing through the "Sorrowful Way," and visiting the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. He had just commenced a description of the walls around the city, when he decided to stop, leaving a small portion of Jerusalem yet to be shown.

In all Dr. Herring has about 200 views and the remaining ones will be divided into two lectures. Many of the best ones are yet to be shown. The silver offering received last night was for the benefit of the Men's Club to cover the expense of publishing the weekly church bulletin.

Letter of Sympathy.

Mrs. J. P. Truitt, daughter of the late Colonel John F. Wilson, former mayor of the borough, was the recipient yesterday of a letter of condolence from the Mayor and Councilmen of the borough. At the last meeting of the Council a copy of the letter was ordered spread on the official minutes.

Promises to Abstain.

Lewis Beekman, of Finderne, charged with being drunk and disorderly on East Second street yesterday morning was discharged in the city court this morning by Judge Runyon on his promise to never offend again. The man had a good record and had never been arrested befeore.

WILLIAMS GREAT STUDENT

Local Church Workers Greatly Impressed with Personality of Y.M.C.A. Evangelist.

SHOP MEETING TOMORROW.

Local Campaign Will be Concluded With Rally for Schoolboys on Saturday Morning.

Those who have heard Bradford Williams, the Y. M. C. A. evangelist, deliver his recitals and addresses during his campaign in this city have been impressed with the remarkable personality of the man. (Without doubt he is one of the greatest students in the religious world.

That he has an extraordinary and powerful memory is disclosed in his style of reciting long chains of scriptural passages, and that he is a thorough student, is shown in the mammoth task he is now engaged, that of memorizing forty-two recitals for his 1910 season, which will include the entire book of Acts and several of St. Paul's epistles. A unique feature of Mr. Williams' methods in memorizing the scriptures is that he practically does all of his studying out of doors, and does very little reading indoors.

Mr. Williams makes his appearance at Scotch Plains today. In the First Baptist church this afternoon he gave a recital while he will deliver an address at the same place tonight. Tomorrow afternoon he will give a recital at the local Y. M. C. A. and in the evening in the association's hall he will deliver an address, his theme being "The Undiscovered Country."

Shop noonday meetings will be inaugurated tomorrow at noon when Mr. Williams will address the employes of the Quincy, Manchester and Sargent plant, corner Front street and Clinton avene. On Friday he will conduct a meeting at the Potter Printing Press Works.

Mr. Williams will conclude his local campaign on Saturday morning at the Y. M. C. A., when he will address a boys' rally, his subject being "The Magicians of the Bible." Secretary Parker is directing his efforts toward making this one of the most important of meetings and invitations have been extended to all schoolboys, twelve years and older, to be present at the service.

Following his Plainfield engagements Mr. Williams will journey to Michigan and later go to Pittsburg.

ANNUAL RECEPTION FOR PASTOR AND WIFE

The annual reception of the Seventh Day Baptist church and congregation was held at the home of the pastor, Rev. Edwin Shaw, on Central avenue, when he and Mrs. Shaw received a large number of members and friends of the church. The affair was strictly an informal one, it being more in the nature of a quiet "at home."

Mr. and Mrs. Shaw received guests alone in the parlor. Mrs. A. C. Negley was in charge of the dining room, and she was assisted in serving by Mrs. Sarah Wardner, Mrs. Frank J. Hubbard and Mrs. Clarence Spicer.

The whole evening was given up to sociability and the exchange of good wishes, while the pastor and his wife were assured of the continued hearty support of their people in the good work they are doing here.

SHAKESPEAREAN SCHOLAR TO LECTURE AT COLLEGE.

Dr. William Callan, of New York, an eminent scholar and teacher, will give the first of a series of Shakespearean lectures at Mt. St. Mary's College tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, in the college auditorium. The Plainfield Auto-'Bus Company will have a bus at the North avenue station from 3 to 3:15 to convey the invited guests to the college.

Among the subjects of the lectures to be given are "Macbeth," "Hamlet," "Julius Ceasar," "Henry V.," "The Idols of the King" and "The Silas Marner." It is hoped in this way to get the Plainfield people interested in a course of studies on this and similar topics.

Half-Year Meeting of Friends.

The half-yearly meeting of the Religious Society of Friends will be held tomorrow and Friday at the meeting-house on Watchung avenue. The religious meeting will be held at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. The afternoon session will be under the care of the philanthropic committee. In the evening at 8 o'clock, Henry W. Wilbur, of Philadelphia, will give lantern views of his trip to England.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION ON SUB-SURFACE WATER

In the decision handed down by the Court of Errors and Appeals at Trenton on Monday, it is made plain that the diversion of sub-surface waters for foreign consumption will eventually become illegal. The suit brought by Frank W. Meeker to restrain the Hudson County Water Company from using the sub-surface water on his farm to supply a water system of Staten Island makes it likely that some legislation will be necessary in the near future to prevent the future depredations of that particular water company.

Governor John Franklin Fort in discussing the matter yesterday said that he believed that the Meeker suit clearly established the doctrine in this State of reasonable use in connection with sub-surface water and should prevent their diversion. Governor Fort declared that he was not sure that special legislation was necessary and it was because of his awaking the decision in the Meeker suit that a special session of the Legislature was not called for November 9. Governor Fort and Attorney-General Edmund Wilson, held a conference on the water question late yesterday afternoon.

CHARLES N. CRITTENDON DEAD AT THE AGE OF 76

Charles N. Crittenden, the well known New York philanthropist, died in San Francisco yesterday. Mr. Crittenton was more specially known through the establishment of the various Florence Crittenton missions throughout the country. The missions were established as a monument to Mr. Crittenton's daughter Florence, who died at the age of five and who was her father's idol. He began the rescue mission as a monument to her memory and it is safe to say no such monument was ever erected in the name of another child.

Mr. Crittenton established missions in all the large cities of the world even in Japan, China and Mexico the monuments to this child are to be found. It was the dying request of little Florence that something be done for the children and the mothers of the slums and Mr. Crittenton devoted his time to the uplifting of the fallen from the time of his daughter's death in 1882 until he himself was taken. He was seventy-six years old. He was born in Henderson, N. Y., February 20, 1833, and early in his life went to New York, where he soon gained recognition as a business man. His store at 115 Fulton street was one of the most widely known drug stores in this country.

MISS WILSON TO WED LESLEY WILLIAM HALLOCK.

At a luncheon given today by Mrs. Charles L. Wilson, of Park Lane, announcement was made of the engagement of her daughter, Marjorie Irene, to Lesley William Hallock, son of Mr. and Mrs. George D. Hallock, of Willow avenue, the borough.

Miss Wilson was formerly of Brooklyn, having resided in Plainfield but a year. The guests at the luncheon included Miss Frances Van Deventer, Miss Beresford Letcher, Miss Caroline S. Martin, Miss Lucie R. Budlong, Miss Helen W. Stevens, of this city, and Miss Ida Raymond and Miss Marguerite Gale, of Brooklyn.

Is Mentally Unbalanced.

Charles Jefferson, colored, about thirty years old was brought before City Judge Runyon this morning on complaint of some of his neighbors, who believe Jefferson is not mentally right. Judge Runyon engaged the man in conversation and concluded to hold him for an examination as to his sanity. Jefferson appears to think his honesty is the cause of the action of his friends and tells incoherent stories of his employment and attempts to satisfy his boarding mistress. He will be examined by City Physician Lufburrow today.

Two Bicycles Await Owners.

The borough appears to be a dumping ground for stolen wheels. Last night Chief Weiss picked one up in the middle of Craig place, while John Hummel, of Linden avenue and Duer streets, found a boy's wheel in his front yard. Both wheels were evidently stolen and thrown away by the thieves.

Daley Fined Five Dollars.

William Daley entered a plea of guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct in the borough police court last night and was fined five dollars by Recorder Dolliver.

Seasame Club to Meet.

The Sesame Club will meet tomorrow morning with Miss Anna Runyon, 335 East Sixth street.

JACKSON JURY DISAGREE

After Being Out 20 Hours, They are Discharged by the Court.

A NEW TRIAL FOR NEGRO.

Colored Man Indicted for Assaulting Policeman Nolan Will Face Jury Again.

The jury in the assault and battery case of William Jackson, colored, which went out at 12 o'clock yesterday, returned to court at 10 o'clock this morning. Being unable to agree, the court discharged the jurymen, which means that there will be a new trial.

Shortly after the jury went out yesterday it was reported that it stood 9 to 3 for conviction and when the last ballot was taken it was 7 to 5 in favor of the defendant. It was also reported that the first ballot stood 11 to 1 for conviction.

William G. DeMeza represented Jackson, and in his closing speech to the court yesterday in behalf of the negro, he made an especially strong plea. This was based on the apparently good character of his client as shown by the many witnesses. It was evident that his earnest words had great weight with the jury.

Assistant Prosecutor Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., handled the case for the State in a masterly way, leaving no stone unturned in his efforts to secure conviction of the man charged with a brutal assault on Patrolman Tobias Nolen. His address to the jury was particularly effective.

Jackson had a mixup with Patrolman Nolen in July last, when it is said he not only used vile and abusive language to the officer, but took his club away from him and beat him on the head and then bit him on the thumb. The assault aroused unusual interest, because of the fact that many wealthy residents of North Plainfield, by whom Jackson had been employed, voluntarily offered to testify in his behalf. They told of his good character and said that he had always been a steady reliable workman.

FUNERAL OF MRS. LAWRENCE MYERS THIS AFTERNOON.

The funeral of Mrs. Lawrence Myers took place this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The servics were held at the late residence "Sunnyside," 537 East Front street, and were conducted by Rev. Dr. John S. Zelie, pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church of which Mrs. Myers was a member.

The Lotus Glee Club, of New York, sang effectively three hymns, "Beyond the smiling and the weeping," "Crossing the bar" and "Ten thousand times ten thousand," all favorites of Mrs. Myers. The interment was in Hillside cemetery.

Compton Building Changes Hands.

Jacob Fass, proprietor of "The Paris" store, has purchased the well-known Compton building on West Front street for investment purposes. The ground floor of this building is occupied by W. W. Warnock, the baker, and H. A. Bonn, the milliner and the upper floors are used for flats. Mr. Fass purchased the property from the Mono Investment Company. The consideration is not given.

Father Daniel McCarthy.

Father Daniel McCarthy, for two years pastor of the Holy Trinity Catholic church, Westfield, died at 10 o'clock this morning in the Elizabeth Hospital from Bright's disease with which he had been a sufferer for for some time. The funeral will be held from St. Mary's church, Elizabeth, Saturday morning.

Walter S. Gibson, a former Plainfield boy, has received appointment of assistant chief in Passaic's new paid fire department. Gibson was appointed to the office by the Common Council of that city on Monday night. A salary of $700 is attached to the office.

New Physician in Borough.

Dr. Grace Powell, formerly a practitioner in New York, has removed to the borough and opened an office at 23 Duer street. Dr. Powell is a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of New York. She has also been identified with hospital work.

Why Go Out of Your Own City to Buy COATS and SUITS?

We would like to have a heart to heart talk with those who have heretofore gone out of their own city to buy Ready-to-Wear Garments. Those with whom we have come in contact this season, and who have always bought outside of Plainfield, are now thoroughly convinced that we are equipped to satisfy the taste of the most fastidious dressers—and then save them money. Buy in your own city. Have a pride in its development. Don't leave your money with a concern who has no possible interest in your city's welfare.

THINK THIS OVER. THE HABIT IS MERELY ONE OF NOT THINKING.

Sample Line of Ladies' Coats

We place on sale this week a manufacturer's sample line of beautiful Coats in black and colored, at 25 per cent. less than regular price. These are garments of the very highest standard that we stand back of with our positive guarantee. The prices, while they last, run from

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

The controversy between the Common Council and officials of the New York Telephone Company over the latter's desire to string wires through the borough, is likely to be settled on an amicable basis at the next meeting. There is considerable opposition, however, on the part of citizens to giving permission to the company to string its wires through the trees. It was the general understanding, at first, that the poles of the Public Service Corporation would be utilized for the purpose. Borough Attorney Hetfield now has the matter in his hands and he is engaged in preparing an opinion to be submitted to the borough fathers.

The woman folk of New Market are anxiously awaiting the announcement of the engagement of a popular young woman of the village to a Philadelphia man. 'Tis said that the young man popped the question at the recent firemen's dance and was accepted.

'PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

Funeral services of the late Mrs. Maria Noble, who died at the home of her son, Morton C. Noble, at Newark, Saturday morning, were held from the son's home yesterday morning at 8 o'clock, committal service being held at the grave in the Baptist cemetery here at 11:15 o'clock. The service at the grave, which was in charge of Rev. Franklin K. Mathiews, was attended by many of the old friends and neighbors who had known and loved the deceased during her many years residence here. The floral offerings were beautiful and included several set pieces. The bearers were August L. Frentz, John Bornmann, John E. Flannery and Charles Drake.

The underbrush on the Mountainside near St. Mary's convent, was set on fire yesterday. Some effort should be made to apprehend the guilty party or parties, who make a business of setting the woods on fire in that section every year, endangering property as well as destroying young game.

Gas Engines for Convenience

A power drive which works as you want it when you want it without demanding personal attention is a convenient drive.

That's the kind of drive you can get by using a gas engine.

Anybody can start a gas engine; once started it runs itself.

No engineer required. No boilers to be attended to. See that the oil cups are replenished and the machine cleaned and that's about all the attention a gas engine requires. An hour a day will cover it.

A governor automatically regulates the consumption of fuel to the running load of the engine.

So that besides being convenient, a gas engine is economical. It is likewise efficient.

What method of drive are you using Mr. Producer? What does it cost you as compared with the cost of a gas engine? Investigate.

GOLF.

According to the advance proofs of this month's "Golfers' Magazine," containing the latest utterances of Charles F. Thompson, president of the Western Golf Association, the devotees of the game beyond the Alleghenies are by no means pacified. On the contrary, if Mr. Thompson is to be believed, the West still has its grievance, and is as much on the warpath as before. He takes exception to a recent editorial from the pen of Walter J. Travis, in which the Garden City man said in part as follows:

The naked truth develops that the policy of the Western Golf Association, which has found expression in assailing the parent body and in adopting rules of its own, which are in certain respects incompatible with each other and at variance with the St. Andrews rules, and in endeavoring to create sectional animosity, is not approved by any single representative Western golfer.

In contradiction, Mr. Thompson goes into the subject at length. He begins as follows: Nothing could be further from the truth than the foregoing statement. In the first place, the Western Golf Association has never assailed the United States or any other golf association. Individuals have criticised the method and form of the United States Golf Association government, but these critics have not all been Western men, for Easterners, and men of the criticisms. The critics have claimed that the United States Golf Association is not a representative association, in that about five-sixths of its membership is denied the right to vote. Further, one of the vice-presidents of the United States Golf Association, in a recent article published over his signature, admitted that the membership of the association was composed of clubs four-fifths of which were east of the Allegheny Mountains.

The association cannot, then, claim a national character from its membership, inasmuch as the territory from which comes four-fifths of its membership is, geographically, a little ribbon of land running along a portion of the Atlantic Coast of the United States. It takes more than a name to make a nation, and likewise to make a national golf association. What they (the critics), in effect, contend is that the game needs one national body thoroughly representative of the entire country, and that the United States Golf Association is not in form and substance a national or a representative association.

What are the policies of the Western Golf Association? A recognition of the other associations within its territory by having them represented on the Western Golf Association directory through the election of one of their officers; a broad and progressive method of government, in order to keep pace with the great and widespread growth of the game; the belief that each club in the association is an integral and component part of it, and as such, is entitled to a voice in all legislation and elections. These, substantially, are the policies of the Western Golf Association and that they are approved by the representative citizens of the West and South is evidenced by the phenomenal growth of the Western Golf Association, which has been greater in the last few years than that of any other golf association in the country.

This recent outburst of misleading comment on the policies of the Western Golf Association, its rules, etc., seems to me to be an attempt by Eastern writers to throw dust in the eyes of the golfers in order to cloud the real issue, which is, shall we have a representative body of national importance in substance as well as in name? That the belief that this campaign is inspired by at least some of the officials of the United States Golf Association seems well founded, inasmuch as one of its officers only recently, over his own signature, saw fit to make the same erroneous statement about the rules of the Western Golf Association.

HEALTH IN THE SCHOOL

Prof. Robert G. Leavitt Recommends Individual Drinking Cups.

BEFORE SOMERSET TEACHERS.

Interesting Addresses Heard at Institute at Somerville—Dr. Krebs Presided.

Professor Robert G. Leavitt, of the Trenton Normal School, in an address before the Somerset County Teachers' Institute at Somerville yesterday afternoon, advocated the use of individual drinking cups among school children, as one of the methods to halt the spread of tuberculosis, in this State, as well as in the entire country. The suggestion was enthusiastically received by the teachers, and President H. C. Krebs, who is superintendent of the North Plainfield schools, will it is understood, foster the idea, and aid in its adopted by the State Board of Education, at the next session of that body.

"The natural history of certain gems" was the theme of Professor Leavitt's address. He, however, confined his remarks mainly to the spread of tuberculosis. "As a step in the right direction to check the disease," he said, "I favor a law which would compel every public school pupil in the State to bring along to school a cup only to use personally.

"The conditions are naturally worse in the country district," continued Dr. Leavitt, "as it is invariably the case that one cup is used by all of the pupils. In the city schools the conditions are nearly as bad although there are usually a few more cups available.

"It has been proved that any person's mouth can contain germs," emphasized Dr. Leavitt, "hence it is an easy matter to understand why the disease is communicable in the public schools of the State."

Professor Leavitt in his remarks furnished some interesting statistics. He claimed that one tenth of the population of the State and country will be victims of the white plague. Out of the 2,500,000 population in this State, he said 250,000 would surely die of the disease, and that out of the 88,000,000 population in the United States, 800,000 are sure to die unless the plague is checked. Last year he recalled the fact that nearly 4,000 were victims of tuberculosis in New Jersey.

Dr. Leavitt also called attention to the fact that pneumonia is running consumption a close race in the mortality table.

The session yesterday concluded a two-day meeting which was largely attended by teachers from all sections of the county. H. C. Krebs, president of the association, presided and added a few remarks on the work being conducted by the State Teachers Association.

Miss Cornelia E. MacMullan, of the State Normal Schol of Montclair, gave an interesting discourse, her topic being, "The Teacher." Miss MacMullan also presented a paper on "The Poem in the Grades." In the afternoon section Professor Leavitt also discussed "What we know about some forms of infection."

The Simple Life.

The distinguished traveler had requested that while being entertained in the South, Creole dishes be barred from the banquet board.

"I harbor the most pleasant anticipations of your hospitality," he wrote the committee, "and rejoice that sectionalism is dead, but I do not feel called to lay my digestive apparatus even upon the sacred altar of friendship."—Philadelphia Ledger.

An Opiate Needed.

Mr. Newpop—I say doctor, I wish you would prescribe something to make my wife sleep at night. The baby has just begun cutting teeth, and——

Doctor—Oh, it's the baby you want the opiate for, is it?

Mr. Newpop—No; for my wife. You see, every time the baby gets another tooth she is so excited that she keeps me awake half the night talking about it.

"OSTERMOOR MATTRESSES."

WING-HANDED BATS.

Some near relations of ours, the wing-handed bats, may be regarded, practically specialized for the task of catching nocturnal flies and midges, says The Cornhill Magazine.

Few people know how nearly they are related to us. They belong to the self-same division of the higher mammals as man and the apes; their skeleton answers to ours, bone for bone, and joint for joint, in an extraordinary manner; only the unessential fact that they have very long fingers with a web between as an organ of flight prevents us from instantly and instinctively recognizing them as remote cousins once removed from the gorilla.

The female bat, in particular, is absurdly human. Most of them feed off insects alone; but a few, like the famous vampire bats of South America, take a mean advantage of sleeping animals, and suck their blood after the fashion of mosquitoes, as they lie defenseless in the forest or on the open pampas.

Others, like the flying foxes of the Malay archipelago, make a frugal meal off fruit and vegetables; but even these are confirmed and persistent night flyers.

They hang head downward from the boughs of trees during the hot tropical daytime, but sally forth at night with Milton's sons of Belial, to rob the banana patches and invade the plantain grounds of the industrious native. The bat is a lemur, compelled by dire need to become a flying night bird.

No Help for Him.

"Don't you think, Minerva," said her husband, anxiously, as he tied the kitchen apron around his waist and tucked his wiskers behind the bib to keep them out of the dishwater, relates London Tit-Bits, "don't you think we are carrying the idea of co-operation in domestic matters to extremes?"

"I have been washing dishes for a week now, and between times I have been doing a little Scripture reading and I cannot find in the Bible any authority for men doing kitchen work, but women are frequently spoken of in this connection."

"She looketh well to the ways of her household!' 'She worketh willingly with her hands!' 'She riseth while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household!' These quotations, Minerva, would seem to warrant the conclusion that household duties should properly be assigned to the woman."

"My dear," replied his wife, "if you will pursue your studies further you will find in II. Kings xxi., 13, these words: 'I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it, turning it upside down.' This proves that you are nobly doing the work designed to you by Providence. When you are through be sure to wash the towels clean, shake them, and hang them straight on the rack. Death, you know, may lurk in the dishcloth."

"I am going to attend a meeting of the Society for the Extinction of the Microbe by Means of Electricity."

The Brute.

Frederick Mathushek, the founder of our house, was born at the Palace of Manheim, Germany, June 9, 1814. Before he reached the age of seventeen years he had made several improvements in pianos. In 1840 he came to America, where he devoted his life to the manufacture and improvement of the piano-forte. Unselfishly he has given to the world the benefit of his wonderful inventive genius, for many of his valuable inventions were not patented, but were given for the benefit of his craft and will be found embodied in the best makes of pianos throughout the world.

MOTHERS CONGRESS WORK

Instructive Talks Heard at Annual Meeting of N. J. Association.

The New Jersey Congress of Mothers held its ninth annual meeting at the Trenton High School on Friday and Saturday, November 12 and 13. The Mothers' association of Plainfield was represented by Mrs. H. D. Corbusier, Mrs. William Sanford, Jr., Mrs. S. H. Voorhees, Mrs. G. S. Simons and Mrs. George B. Wean.

Friday morning was given over to a meeting of the board of managers. On Friday afternoon an address of welcome was delivered by John Hartpence, president of the Trenton Board of Education, to which the president of the New Jersey Congress Mrs. Thomas B. Holmes, responded.

The principal address was given by Prof. William S. Monroe, of the State Normal School of Montclair, whose subject was "Mental Effort and Mental Fatigue." His main points were these: All effort, mental, as well as physical, causes fatigue, owing to the fact that both forms of effort are brought about and directed by the central nervous system. It is a physiological fact that every act of the day causes an actual diminution or shrinkage of the cells of the brain. This loss in actual size of the individual cells, is, however, made up and neural energy is replenished by rest. When, however, the strain has been too great, the shrinkage can not be entirely replaced.

But effort is necessary to development. The child is born with about as many nerve cells as he will ever have, but exercises and training increase the capacity of these cells and enlarge their power of endurance. It is only the over-strain and the too great fatigue which are injurious. When the nerve cells are reduced beyond a certain point they break up and disappear and are gone forever. Over-fatigue is a danger also, because it produces, by the breaking down of these cells, a poison which is carried in the blood and unless long periods of rest are taken to allow of recuperation this causes a lasting injury.

Some fatigue is a necessity in the training of a child and to increase his capacity. On the approach of fatigue, if an effort is made to overcome it, next time the child can do more and accomplish more before reaching the point of fatigue. But if we go too far and become too tired, we even lose what skill we have gained.

Frequent rest periods are an absolute necessity. Experiments carried on in Munich have proved that a small child in school should have a rest pause at the end of every thirty minutes, and older children should not work more than fifty minutes without a rest.

The gymnasium can never be a substitute for the recess. The sustained attention necessary for doing gymnasium work in a class or under the direction of an instructor is in itself a cause of fatigue. This sort of physical training is good, but can never take the place of recreation or frequent rest pauses.

Prof. Monroe made a plea for short recitation periods, saying that by far the greatest number of mistakes is made at the end of the period. He spoke of the relation of fatigue to the weather; to periods of rapid growth in the child; to food and to sleep. He recommended recognition of these things and arrangement of work with reference to them. Place the more difficult and mentally fatiguing subjects like mathematics in the winter months, and see that the child gets plenty of sleep. This is a necessity and lack of a proper amount of sleep will surely have bad its bad effect, if not now, at some future period of life. Prof. Monroe said that all the cases of break-down in high school that he had investigated were brought about not by school work, but by home work; too many social pleasures and not enough sleep. The young man or young woman of high school age requires at least nine or ten hours of sleep every night to recuperate and replenish the actual wasting of his nerve cells during the day.

In regard to food, he said that the great trouble with most people and most school children is that they have not too little food, but too much food, and this not of the most nourishing kind. Let the food be plain and good; insist upon plenty of sleep; and we shall have done much toward solving the problem of mental fatigue.

Friday evening was given over to an address by Hurman Mueller on "True Art in Home Decoration."

Saturday afternoon there were a number of short addresses. Mrs. J. S. Bolton, secretary of the National Congress of Mothers, reported on the recent conference on infant mortality, which was attended by five hundred physicians in New Haven, Conn. Mrs. Edwin C. Grice, of Riverton, honorary president of the New Jersey Congress and ex-president of the National Society, made a plea for religious training in the home, closing her remarks by quoting the motto which is on the walls of the Cambridge Library: "It is noble to be pure; it is wise to be temperate; it is necessary to be industrious; but to know God is the best of all."

Mrs. Frederic Schoff, president of the National Congress of Mothers, spoke of the desirability of offering help to individual mothers in training their children, saying: "Every mother can do better by studying than by trusting to mere instinct and chance to bring up her children."

Miss Lillian M. Williams, of the State Normal School of Trenton, gave the principal address of the afternoon, closing the program with a forceful talk on "The Positive and Negative;" a plea for developing the affirmative attitude toward life; the value of "Do this" rather than "Don't do that." "Show a child the right thing instead of pointing out the wrong. When faults are emphasized they are remembered while the corrections are forgotten."

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

When Daniel Sully appears at the Plainfield theatre tonight in Jerrold Shepard's new play, "The Game," the event will be one of a special nature to him as well as to the audience. Mr. Sully has been so long identified with the character of a priest in his previous plays that his departure to a new and widely different role is a decided novelty for the actor as well as an innovation of interest to his admirers. It is a far cry from the genial, kindly Father Daly of "The Matchmaker" to the hustling aggressive sporting politician Tim Mayo in "The Game."

"Eight Bells," the show that is to come to the Plainfield theatre, matinee and night, November 20, has been on the road sixteen years. That is a pretty long time for one play to be going the rounds and at the same time to meet the great success that has come to this one. There are only a few who can point to such a record and one can name them on the fingers on one hand and still have a couple left with which to scratch his head and try to think of more. "Eight Bells" when first produced was the product of the Byrne Brothers in every sense of the word.

The management of the Plainfield theatre announces a special engagement for Monday night, November 22, of Miss Elsie Ferguson in Channing Pollock's successful fairy play, "Such a Little Queen." This will be Miss Ferguson's first appearance in Plainfield since she was elevated to stardom by Henry B. Harris during her first week at the Hackett theatre in New York. Proclaimed by the New York critics an actress worthy of a Maude Adams or an Ethel Barrymore position, Miss Ferguson was made a star almost "over night," and has been appearing for four consecutive months at the Hackett theatre. Plainfield will be her first stop on a tour that will take the little artist to the Pacific coast and back.

operation with the medical work, their home being right opposite Dr. Storer's hospital in Kin Kiang.

There is a mission training school which is held in a rented building, but it is expected that through the loyal support of the Elizabeth District women to have a new building where the work may be continued uninterruptedly. On Miss Hughes' first visit there she saw no Chinese women in any of the mission meetings because up to that time there were no Bible women. Now there are seven of these women and the work of the missions is carried on with satisfaction to everybody.

Miss Hughes said that the hope of evangelizing China is in the women, native mothers who have learned the meaning of love through the ministrations of the missionaries. While she is here the women thus instructed will carry on Miss Hughes' work. The audience was greatly moved by Miss Hughes' fervent talk about the Chinese and their needs.

The next convention of the society will be held in St. Paul's Methodist church at Tottenville, Staten Island, in November, 1910.

Harmless Opposition.

"Your political antagonist is calling you every name he can think of," said the agitated friend.

SOME STATE NEWS BRIEFS

Coming down a hill with a wagon-load of furniture at Beverly, a horse belonging to C. H. Cheeseman ran away, dashed into a brick house, broke its back and had to be killed.

Not a trace of Miss Mae McLaughlin, who left her home in North Woodbury, nearly a week ago, on an errand and failed to return, has been found, althought her brother-in-law, James Mitchell, with whom she made her home, has been in constant search, with the aid of officers.

Chief of Police Linderman, of Merchantville, arrested three negro youths Monday, charged with wholesale theft of bicycles. The prisoners were given a hearing by Mayor Longsterth and committed for court. They are Thomas Blackson, Elmer Price and James Turner, all residents of Homesteadville.

While making an effort to stop a runaway horse, "Tony" Rene, of Dundee Lake, was knocked down by the animal while in Madison street, Paterson, Monday and trampled upon by the horse. The iron shoe struck Rene on the head, fracturing his skull. The man was admitted to the General Hospital.

Dr. Samuel P. Russell, a dentist, of 97 Bergenline avenue, Union Hill, made application to Vice-Chancellor Stevenson in Jersey City Monday for an injunction restraining his former wife, Mrs. Margaret J. Burns, from using the title "Doctor" before her name and also from using the name of Russell. Vice-Chancellor Stevenson reserved decision.

County Detective Lore, of Cumberland county, has gone to Canton, O., to secure Tyler Gibbs, who was arrested there charged with being a fugitive from justice. He was arrested in Bridgeton some months ago charged with falsifying accounts of a construction company, and bail to the amount of $1,000 was furnished by Nathaniel Atkinson, a local liveryman.

"Topsy," the old black and white cat, which had been the pet of the boys of Company 3 in Jersey City for the last nine years, was killed Monday by a big bulldog. Michael Duffy, the owner of the dog, is in jail because he is unable to pay a fine of $50 imposed by Acting Judge Karkley in the First Criminal Court, for cruelty to animals. He is charged with having set the dog on the cat, but denies it.

The jury which tried the suit of Solomon Morrell against Minna Preiskel, in Circuit Court at Paterson, rendered a verdict for the plaintiff in the amount of $1,750 yesterday. Mr. Morrell bought a piece of property in Passaic from Mrs. Prieskel, paying $11,500 for it, and after he had improved it he found one of the Passaic city's sanitary drains several feet below the surface As the transfer stated that the property was free and clear of all incumbrances Mr. Morrell brought suit to recover the damages done to the land by the presence of the piping. The defendants Monday admitted the presence of the drain but the dispute was over the amount of damages that should be paid.

A jury in the Camden Circuit Court Monday in the suit of Miss Esther McTaggart against the Merrimac Manufacturing Company, returned a verdict of $2,500 for the plaintiff. Miss McTaggart was employed at the plant of the corporation, which is engaged in the manufacture of shirtwaists at West and Clinton streets, Camden. On April 29 of the present year she tripped and fell down a flight of stairs, sustaining injuries of a permanent character. The plaintiff contended that the steps were in bad repair and that she tripped over a protruding nail. The defense was that the steps were in good shape and practically new, and that Miss McTaggart contributed to the accident by wearing high-heeled shoes.

RAHWAY PASTOR TO LEAVE.

Rev. N. A. Merritt, pastor for the past eight years of the First Baptist church, Rahway, read his resignation at the morning service Sunday. To a few the letter came as a surprise. Most of the church members, however, had known of the meeting held by the board of deacons Wednesday night, when the pastor's intention was considered. Following the reading of the paper by Mr. Merritt came the statement that a special meeting of the officers and church would be held immediately following prayer service tonight. Expressions of regret are heard on all sides regarding Mr. Merritt's leaving Rahway.

It is felt that going to the New Brunswick charge is a step upward for the pastor. Rev. Mr. Merritt was formerly a Newarker and came from there to Rahway.

The resignation will become effective December 1.

Sentiment for Husbands.

"When a man really loves his wife he ought to conbine all his nicest sentiments toward other women into one big sentiment for her."

"He should show her the respect he feels toward his mother, the politeness he shows other women and the responsibility he feels toward his sister."

"To all of that he should add the great love he should feel for a wife."

The Battle

By

Cleveland Moffett

Copyright, 1909, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

"The Wisconsin mills will furnish it to the combination at 15 per cent off the jobbers' price."

"They will accept thirty day notes from the different bakers?"

"Exactly. No trouble about it at all."

Haggleton turned to Gentle.

"You see," he pointed out, "we shall save on wages and material. We'll do a bigger business because we'll sell better bread—and cheaper bread." Then he turned to Philip again.

"How many bakers have come into the combination?" he asked.

"Six so far, but we can get more."

"Get more?" echoed the millionaire. "Why, within ten days all the little bakers on the east side will be tumbling over themselves to get in."

"They've got to come in," began Philip grimly, "or"—

"Or what?"

It was Gentle who spoke, and there was a world of meaning in his voice. This was Philip, the friend of the poor. Indeed, the boy had drifted far away from his teachings in these few days under Haggleton's influence.

Philip looked at him; then his eyes wavered. He saw the accusation in his old friend's face.

"They've got to come in, or go out of business."

"Philip," said Gentle quietly and very gravely—"Philip, my boy, do you realize that you are building up a little trust? That you will turn men out of work?"

The young man looked uneasy.

"A few men will be thrown out of work. But we'll give better bread and cheaper bread to the whole east side."

"Just so," declared Haggleton. And he added, "Incidentally I will prove that a poor man like Moran can conquer these tenement house conditions if he has any gumption."

Haggleton went on.

"We'd better take that empty flat across the hall for sleeping rooms. We shall need this one for offices."

"In a little while," he asserted, "you'll see Joe Caffrey at work in a clean shirt, with pool rooms cut out, and Moran will stop kicking."

"I doubt that, Mr. Haggleton," said Gentle dryly.

"As long as a man has no money he's a kicker about the wrongs of the poor, Mr. Gentle. Give him some, and he stops kicking. That's why Socialists are poor."

"Some Socialists are rich."

"Oh, yes," answered Haggleton, "parlor Socialists, but they never earned the money themselves."

Philip came to the assistance of his old friend.

"Still," he said, turning to Haggleton, "the main point is that things in this country are not fair between the rich and the poor."

Haggleton faced Philip and Gentle. He felt the time had come for a decisive statement.

"Look here," he began sternly; "you can't expect one class to fight the battles of another class. Why should they? Do you fight our battles? If you want us to run our railroads and mines and factories in a certain way, it's up to you to make us do it. You've got votes; we've got money and organization. It's a fight, class against class. You want to get rid of your grievances; we want to keep our privileges. Go ahead—make laws, inspect our books, learn our secrets, put us in jail, do anything. But if you can't do anything, keep still, take your medicine and don't come whining to us to play your game. We will never do it—never! We are too busy playing our own."

Moran stormed into the room. He was hot, disheveled; his eyes glittered.

"Here, you, Jackson!" he shouted. "Do you think that you can grab the whole bakeshop business and throw hundreds of men out of work? My boss has joined your combination, and I've got notice to quit! It's an outrage!"

He turned upon Haggleton.

"Hold on!" commanded Philip.

Moran restrained himself.

"See here, Moran," the millionaire began, "this combination is a good thing."

"It's a blamed monopoly"—

The baker's assistant started on another speech full of abuse.

"You watch him," said Haggleton, dryly to Gentle. "Now listen."

"Look here, Moran; we'll make better bread and cheaper bread for the whole east side."

"Yes, and you'll ruin homes in every street."

Better and better, thought Haggleton. The man was working himself up to a climax of denunciatory fury. The anticlimax he had already prepared would be all the more telling.

"We will make a lot of money," he said.

"Blood money!" shrieked Moran. "Any man who would touch a penny of it is a low hound!"

"I am sorry you feel that way," Haggleton's voice sounded disappointed. "I had picked you out as assistant manager."

Gentle became very attentive.

"Assistant manager!" exclaimed Moran.

"With a salary of $18 a week to begin with."

"Eighteen to begin!" Moran was staggered.

"But of course," the millionaire went on regretfully, "I can't ask you now to take it, knowing the way you feel. You would regard it as blood money."

"Yes—of course," Moran stammered, "that is to say—perhaps—come to think of it, I don't know as I would"—

"But consider you would always be thinking of those mothers and children."

"Well, cheaper bread would be a blessing, and as assistant manager I could make things easier for them. I accept."

"Very well, then. Go down to the Madison street bakery and help set up the electric kneading machine."

Moran turned with alacrity, touched his hat and went out.

"You see," commenced Haggleton, "it's as easy as that."

He was grimly amused.

Gentle did not answer. It occurred to him that perhaps he might teach Haggleton an object lesson in his turn and regain his influence over Philip. So he said:

"I forgot those tenement house calls, my boy." Turning to Haggleton, he added, "Perhaps you would like to go with us?" But the millionaire replied with barely concealed impatience:

"There is no use in these tenement calls."

"Oh, yes, there is," protested Gentle.

Quietly Haggleton had continued his investigations of this tenement house problem himself and achieved a great deal. Much of the misery he had seen was preventable by the sufferers themselves. Already he had begun to formulate plans which he would lay before these two reformers. His offer of ten millions for the cause to Gentle had not been made on the spur of the moment. Still, considering it wise not to leave Philip just then to the unopposed influence of Gentle, he accompanied them upon their mission.

reverses the usual order of furnace facts. It requires the least amount of fuel and the least amount of care. In return it gives the biggest, hottest fire you ever knew; a clean, clinkerless fire. It burns all the coal and when you shake it all the dust goes up the chimney. BOYNTON furnaces are clean. They give the maximum of heat for a minimum of expense. CURE YOUR KIDNEYS.

Do Not Endanger Life When a Plainfield Citizen Shows You the Cure.

Why will people continue to suffer the agonies of kidney complaint, backache, urinary disorders, lameness, headaches, lanquor, why allow themselves to become chronic invalids, when a certain cure is offered them?

Doan's Kidney Pills is the remedy to use, because it gives to the kidneys the help they need to perform their work.

If you have any, even one, of the symptoms og kidney diseases, cure yourself now, before diabetes, dropsy or Bright's disease sets in. Read this Plainfield testimony:

Mrs. M. Newman, 532 West Fifth street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "A constant pain in my limbs was the principal symptom of my kidney trouble. RABBITS PLENTIFUL SAY LOCAL HUNTERS

Rabbits and other game continue to be plentiful according to the catches of local hunters as registered at Harry Drier's sporting goods emporium. The rain failed to dampen the ardor of Nimrods and hundreds journeyed to mountains and fields again today. What is perhaps the biggest killing of the season was made on Monday and Tuesday by four New York gunners in Hunterdon county, who killed a total of 168 bunnies and one grey squirrel. Other results were:

DEADLY WORK OF A CHEETAH.

A large cheetah, evidently from the jungles near Malapuram, descended a few days ago on the village of Tirur and caused a panic among the village folk, reports the Madras Mail.

Entering a Molpah hut, the beast pounced upon a woman, killing her and then eating away a portion of the face and body. The poor woman screamed for several minutes, but the terrified neighbors could not find sufficient courage to go to the rescue, and on the cheetah emerging there was a general stampede.

The brute went out, savagely attacking all it came across, and some thirteen persons were severely mauled, four of them succumbing to their injuries. Eventually the cheetah concealed itself in a pit, where it was followed by a railway inspector, who shot it. The first shot did not tell, and the cheetah sprang on Mr. Noronha, the official, who managed to evade it. A coolie and Molpah villager going to the rescue were attacked, the villager being dragged down by the cheetah.

Mr. Noronha then shot the beast through the heart. When the villagers found that it was dead they rushed up and belabored the carcass with stones and any weapons they could pick up.

HOPE IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL

For the State and Nation Says Governor Fort and Other Convention Speakers.

THE BIBLE THE MAINSTAY.

More Scientific Methods Needed in Instruction and a Greater Reverence so the Convention Learns.

That the Sunday school is the hope of the State and nation is the opinion of Governor John Franklin Fort and all the ministers of the various churches represented at the Sunday school convention in East Orange yesterday. Governor Fort's address to the 281 delegates from all over the State evidently inspired them with new vigor in the work as it was greeted with tumultuous cheers. He welcomed the visitors and told of the pride he feels in the city free from commercialism and from everything which make for vice.

The Bible, the Governor declared, is the mainstay of the government and he praised the work of the Sunday schools, but regretted the decline in numbers of pupils at these schools. He was at a loss to say whether the decline was of interest in the Sunday schools or the lack of interest shown toward children in the home. He spoke of the value of spiritual instruction for the young and said in the olden days parents and children went to church together.

"They do not do so today, and what is the reason?" asked Governor Fort.

"I do not know. Golf automobiling and other pleasures have hurt church attendance, and while many churches are filled at morning service the same pews are nearly vacant in the evening. But I will not discuss that qusetion, as I may be as great an offender as any one present. The nursery of the church is the Sunday school, and the future of the church depends upon it. Not only the future of the church, but the future of the State as well depends upon the Sunday schools."

A feature of the day's session was the announcement that the Rev. E. Morris Fergusson, for several years general secretary, would not again take up the duties of that position, as he has accepted a position with the Philadelphia Presbytery.

Several interesting addresses marked the opening session, and there was a banquet last night at English's and a conference of the New Jersey Superintendent's Union. Mr. Edward W. Dunham presided. Judge W. E. Andrews, of Washington, D. C., made an address.

The session will continue today and tomorrow. Mr. Alfred H. Holbrook is general chairman.

Rev. John Douglas Adam, pastor of the Munn Avenue Presbyterian church, of East Orange, addressed the delegates also and said that the Sunday school has a far greater place of importance in the affairs of the nation than the most serious man can realize. The church, he said has hardly taken the Sunday school seriously. If it had it would have roused public opinion to an intelligent appreciation of its great scheme. It would have provided teachers with more scientific methods of spiritual instruction, for busy men and women who give their time to teach cannot be supposed to be creators of scientific methods. We must encourage the spirit of reverence among the children for they are looking for examples of concrete Christianity.

HENPECKED HUSBAND MAY QUIT HIS WIFE.

For the fourth time within a fortnight Joseph Block and his wife were in court this morning with complaints and counter complaints and Judge Runyon threw them both out of court. It is apparent that the two will never agree and their continued bickerings will have to be settled in some other way than in a police court.

It is believed by the police that Block is henpecked to the last degree and if he follows the advice of the judge he will refuse to have anything further to do with the woman. Her complaint is that Block beats her. Block says he does not, but alleges that his wife prefers the society of some of her boarders to his, and there you are.

A musical treat is in store for every one who is fortunate enough to secure a copy of the Victor Herbert song to be given with next Sunday's New York World. Music by arrangement with the well known music house of Charles K. Harris & Co. Words and music complete with next Sunday's World.

CONSUMERS' LEAGUE WORK

Child Labor and Sweat Shop Conditions are Shown at Exhibition.

MISS BUTLER IN CHARGE.

At Mrs. Thatcher M. Brown's Home—Large Attendance—The Exhibit Closes Today.

The exhibition of photographs and work done by child labor and under sweat-shop conditions which was given at the residence of Mrs. Thatcher M. Brown on Park avenue yesterday opened the eyes of the hundred or more women who took the opportunity of investigating the story and familiarizing themselves with the existing conditions in the congested districts of our cities and the danger which exists from possible contamination.

Miss Elizabeth Butler, one of the earnest workers in the League, was present and fully explained the workings of the League and its aims. Mrs. Florence Kelley, president of the League, was unable to be present, and it was also unfortunate that Miss Pauline Goldmark, an investigator, could not be there to tell some of the thrilling experiences of her work among the manufacturers of clothing and other commodities. However, we may quote from a previous speech of Mrs. Kelley which will throw some light on the conditions which the League is trying to eliminate.

In a speech before the League in Stamford, Conn., early this year, Mrs. Kelley said, "Seventeen years ago I entered into the work of establishing the Consumers' League in the United States and during those years I have seen so many things of a nature too distressing to relate that I cannot urge you women too forcibly to give attention to the dire povery, dirt and immorality under which some of the garments you wear are manufactured. My attention was first attracted to child labor and its horrors by the vision of a wistful little face pressing against the window pane of a factory near the Hull House in Chicago. This factory was known as the "grindery" and it was aptly named, for I found that more young lives were being ground out than I had ever dreamed of.

"I took with me the truant officer and discovered that the child I had seen was working at a machine grinding penknives and that his hours were from 7 in the morning to 9 at night. Unfortunately there was no law in Illinois at that time to prevent this cruelty but thanks to the good friends we managed to draw around us we had a law passed which forever prohibited the crime. Now the child must be over sixteen years old and can only be made to work eight hours.

"You may be sure that this legislation was not accomplished without much fighting on our part and our League was young. The help of editors, ministers, philanthropists and others went a great way toward giving us a victory.

In speaking of tenement house labor, Mrs. Kelley told an illustrative story which more than shocked her hearers. She said: "I met two children carrying a bundle of knee pants in a street of New York city. Both of them ought to have been in school and I asked the elder of the two why they were not. He replied that there was sickness in his home and the school teacher wouldn't let them in. I asked him who was sick and his reply startled me. He said 'it's me, I got scarlet fever and dey won't let me in.' By further questioning I found that he had received the pants from a concern on West Nineteenth street. I investigated this case and discovered that the boy had told the truth and that the conditions under which this class of work was being done were truly shocking and dangerous to the very last degree."

Many other instances of work done in filthy surroundings were told of and Mrs. Kelley urged the women to refuse to purchase goods which did not bear the League label. Miss Goldmark told of the child labor in the canneries of New York State and added another chapter to the already long list of crimes which certain greddy manufacturers are guilty.

The exhibition at Mrs. Brown's home was open until noon today and was visited by many women who could not be present yesterday. It has served to open the eyes of the best people to th appalling conditions under which many of our needs are made.

Miss Minnie Schmidt, of Brooklyn, who has been visiting friends here, has returned home.

Mrs. Augustus VanDeventer, of Myrtle avenue, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Whittingham, of Baltimore, Md.

In the evening there will be a praise service at 7:30, to be followed a half-hour later with an address, "Why Young People Go Astray," by Mrs. Minnie G. Churchward, pastor of Marlboro church.

There will be a business session Sunday morning at 10 o'clock and at 10:30, "Aggressive Tract Work" will be the subject of a talk by Rev. Dr. T. L. Gardiner, editor of The Sabbath Recorder, to be followed with a sermon by Rev. Edwin Shaw, of the Plainfield church.

The meeting will close Sunday night with a praise service at 7:30 o'clock and at 8 o'clock Rev. Dr. Gardiner will preach the sermon.

TALES OF HOME LIFE AMONG PORTO RICANS

The Home Mission Society of the Congregational church held a tea at the residence of Mrs. J. M. Whiton on Tuesday afternoon at which an interesting and graphic description of the work done among children of Porto Rico was given by Miss Josselyn, a missionary. Miss Josselyn's descriptions of this particular feature of the work there was absorbingly interesting, especially that part which related to the home life of the families.

Miss Josselyn has been in Porto Rico for the past three years and because she had no one to whom she could entrust the work in her absence was obliged to cut her vacation to two months. She will sail for the island again on December 1.

During the afternoon the thank offering envelopes were collected and the amount realized was much more than fifty dollars. This money will be used for home missions. Miss Elsie Goddard rendered two solos which were heartily received and tea was served by the girls' club.

Plans for Debate Completed.

Recorder Charles M. Dolliver, chairman of the committee in charge of the debate on Woman's Suffrage, to be given in Trinity Reformed church tomorrow night, has completed arrangements for the affair. The speakers on the affirmative side of the question will be Russell Doeringer, Edgar F. Sheppard and Mr. Dolliver. Taking the negative side will be Cornelius and Harold Schenck and Fred Smith, Jr., all three being students at Rutgers College.

Juniors to Attend Service.

All of the Jr. O. U. A. M. Councils of the city have been invited to attend a Thanksgiving service to be held at Warren chapel, Sunday night, November 21, when the pastor, Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey, will preach an appropriate sermon. The Juniors will meet at their hall that evening at 7 o'clock.

GRAND JURY'S REPORT

Presentment Aims to Correct Evil of Petty Matters for Higher Courts.

FAVOR A JUVENILE COURT.

Thirty-five True Bills Today, Making a Total of Eighty-six—Grand Jury Is Discharged.

The Union County Grand Jury completed its labors for the term, this morning, and, in making its final report, caused considerable of a stir by several important recommendations. The present session was a long one, and the jurymen were convinced that too much time is taken up in considering cases of minor importance.

In view of this it was recommended by the Grand Jury that in the future minor cases be turned over to a magistrate's court for investigation and disposal. Legislation providing for this important change was recommended.

The matter will be presented to Senator Ernest R. Ackerman and the Assemblymen from Union county.

Another important action was the presentation of a resolution, adopted by the Grand Jury, recommending the establishment of a court for juvenile delinquents. This has been urged by various societies throughout the county and the Grand Jury is convinced that it would be a wise plan to have such a court.

Thirty-five indictments were presented today, making a total of eighty-six in all for the term. It will not be known who the indicted persons are until papers are served.

CITY FATHERS TO ACT ON THREE BOND ISSUES

A special meeting of the Common Council will be held on Monday night to formally instruct the city clerk to advertise for bids for three lots of bonds. These issues include one for $45,000 for the new school, one for $10,000 for furnishing the new school and one for $43,000 for sewer work.

It is probable that the city fathers will meet again in special or adjourned session on Friday night, December 10, to receive bids for the three bond issues. It is generally anticipated that there will be some lively bidding as Plainfield's credit is above par and the money market is easy.

EXPENSE OF ELECTION ESTIMATED AT $21,000

The Board of Freeholders meet in special session this afternoon for the purpose of paying bills contracted at the general election. County Collector Leavitt estimates the cost of the election at about $21,000.

Other matters will also be considered at the meeting. Jefferson avenue, dividing this county from Middlesex county at Plainfield and which has been reconstructed with amesite as material, will probably be accepted as a county and State aid road.

This morning the freeholders inspected the work done on Jefferson avenue, with the members of the Middlesex board. Deputy State Road Commissioner Robert A. Riker, of Trenton, were with the freeholders. If the work is found to be satisfactory the road will probably be accepted on the spot.

Funeral of Mrs. Lawrence Myers.

The funeral of Mrs. Lawrence Myers, which was held yesterday afternoon at her late home "Sunnyside," on East Front street, was attended by a great number of her friends. The floral pieces were unusually numerous and handsome. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. John S. Zelie, pastor of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, assisted by Rev. Dr. William R. Richards, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian church, of New York city, who paid a very touching tribute to the dead woman's beautiful Christian life. Three favorite hmyns were sung by the Lotus Glee Club quartet, of New York. The interment was in Hillside cemetery.

Tea and Sale at Holy Cross.

The women of Holy Cross church will serve tea and chocolate, also sell aprons, dusters, holders, home-made cakes, candies, preserves, pickles and jellies, Wednesday afternoon and evening, December 1, from 2 to 6:30 o'clock in the parish house. There will be a silver offering at the door. The proceeds will go in part for the women's work and the missionary apportionment.

FRIENDS MEETING HERE

Shrewsbury and Plainfield Societies in Half Yearly Session.

SEVERAL USEFUL TALKS MADE.

Margaret F. Vail, Henry W. Wilbur, J. Edward Borden and Others Make Speeches.

The Shrewsbury and Plainfield half-year's meeting of the Religious Society of Friends is being held here today at the meeting-house on Watchung avenue. The meeting for worship convened at 10:30 o'clock. Some visiting Friends are in attendance, including Phebe Wright, of Sea Girt; Robert Barnes and daughter, of Purchase, N. Y.; Clayton Conrow and M. S. Conrow, of Riverton; Henry W. Wilbur, of Philadelphia, John Heritage and Hannah Heritage, of Mickleton, N. J.; J. Edward Borden, of Eatontown, and Anna Rice Powell, formerly of this city, and others.

Margaret F. Vail spoke of the human need of Heavenly bread and the living water of life. Several other ministers followed briefly. Henry W. Wilbur preached an excellent sermon on the thought that the Spiritual life is the normal life, any other than this is the abnormal. He said that every one who had checked the hot word before it was spoken has tasted of the sweets of the Spiritual life.

J. Edward Borden and Margaret F. Vail were clerks of the routine business meeting which followed. Luncheon and supper are served in the upper room of the meeting-house and opportunity for social intercourse was enjoyed.

The afternoon session was occupied by topics along philanthropic lines.

This evening Henry W. Wilbur will give a lantern lecture on his summer experiences in England. The views are said to be exceptionally good. Tomorrow morning will be held the meeting for ministry and counsel and a brief meeting for worship afterwards at 11 o'clock.

CHAUNCEY B. KOONS WEDS MISS VREELAND

Miss Margaret Vreeland, daughter of Judge James H. Vreeland, of East Orange, was married last night to Chauncey Berry Koons, son of T. B. Koons, of Sanford avenue, this city. The wedding took place at the home of the bride, 207 Prospect street, East Orange, in the presence of nearly two hundred guests, who were afterward entertained at a collation.

The color scheme was white and green, the rooms being profusely decorated with white chrysanthemums and southern smilax and palms. Mrs. James Tytler, a sister of the bride was the matron of honor, and Lucius T. Koons, a brother of the groom, was best man. Dr. James Tytler and Norman Probasco were the ushers. A brother and sister of the bride were flower children. An orchestra played the wedding march from Lohengrin. The couple started late last night for a wedding trip to the south and will be at the home in this city about the middle of December.

TO PLACE JEFFERSON IN MORRIS PLAINS.

Charlie Jefferson, the colored man who was held for examination as to his sanity, will be sent to Morris Plains tomorrow. He is undoubtedly mentally unbalanced. His attempted imitation of an opera singer kept the men at police headquarters amused and awake last night. This morning, too, he livened up things so that his audience was led into the belief that it was a woman singing.

Jefferson's form of mania is harmless, but it is likely to keep the attendants in the asylum to which he goes awake most of the time.

Special Features at Bazaar.

Special features of the tea and bazaar to be held in Masonic Hall tomorrow by the Ladies' Auxiliary of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., will be the presence of Madame Fortuna and Madame Nemo, who will display their ability in palmistry, cards, astrology and occultism. The proceeds from the affair will go toward endowing a bed at Muhlenberg Hospital.

Appointed Special Agent.

C. H. Schermerhorn, of 206 East Front street, has been appointed special agent for the Christian World for the district of Plainfield, and says he is finding loyal support in his endeavor to get up subscription clubs in this city.

HINDOO GIRL SPEAKER

Talks to Gatherings at Crescent Ave. Presbyterian and First Baptist Churches.

TELLS OF Y. W. C. A. WORK.

Miss Harriet Taylor, National Secretary of the Foreign Department a Speaker.

Miss Dora Maya Das, the first Hindoo girl, to enlist in service under the Young Women's Christian Association banner, in her visit to this city yesterday, appeared on the platform at the Crescent Avenue and First Baptist churches, and afterward at the Y. W. C. A. rooms, where she told interested gatherings of her plans and preparations to carry on the Y. W. C. A. in her native country when she returns in April.

Miss Das, is of high caste, her father being one of the high officials in India. In preparing for her future work she is a student in the National Training school of the association in New York, and on the completion of her course, she will labor in the colleges and schools in India.

Persons who came in contact with the young woman were agreeably surprised at her mental attainments. She is a beautiful girl, of the dark Hindoo type, and she possesses many brilliant qualities. That she is enthusiastic in the work she has mapped out was demonstrated by the earnestness displayed in her talks.

At the Crescent Avenue church she said: "When I came to the United States it was for an education and not for Christianity, but when I realized the goodness of the hundreds of young American women, I came in contact with, who linked Christianity with education, I too, wanted both.

"American girls," continued Miss Das, "have many things to be thankful for. To me the contrast is so great that I cannot attempt to explain, but I am confident that the light is already dawning on my native country." In the course of her remarks Miss Das related many interesting incidents concerning the lives and opportunities of the young woman in her native land.

Miss Das' last stop was at the local Y. W. C. A. rooms, where she gave a short talk to the pupils of the English classes at the close of their studies. During her stay in this city she was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Stewart, of West Eighth street.

Miss Harriett Taylor, national secretary of the Y. W. C. A. foreign department, who recently returned from a South American tour, also gave an interesting description of conditions among young women in that part of the world. In her remarks she told of the big work being executed by the Y. W. C. A. in Buenos Ayres, which is the only association of its kind in that country at the present time.

In her travels Miss Taylor has visited fifteen countries in the interests of the foreign department. One interesting incident in her remarks was a narrative in which she told how the association secured a foothold at Shanghai, China. The organization of the association in this country, she said, was the results of a garden party given for that purpose in the large estate of the Chinese minister. She also told of the work being conducted among the students in Tokio, Japan.

Miss Taylor also impressed on her hearers of the need for more workers in the field. In Shanghai, she said, there are positions open for three more secretaries, while in India there is room for fifteen more secretaries. Funds are also needed to support the work.

Miss Maya Das, after speaking at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, went to the First Baptist church, where an audience of more than two hundred people was waiting to hear her. In the meantime the service was in charge of Miss Hattie Mattison, as chairman of the program committee of the Young People's Society, under whose auspices it was held.

Miss Das made a most favorable impression. She told a most remarkable story of the life of a boy, a native of India, telling how as a boy he became convinced that the Hindu religion was false and later became a Christian. This led to severe persecution and it nearly cost him his life. After relating this story in an effective manner, Miss Das startled her audience by stating that that boy afterward became her father. She said that it was the first time that she had disclosed the fact in public. The story touched everyone.

Mrs. C. S. Meyers, of East Sixth street, is visiting relatives at Bronx Park, New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Miles, of Somerset street, are receiving congratulations on the birth of their son, who arrived a few days ago.

TRIED TO BRIBE CORSA

Plainfielder Tells of Methods Employed by the Sugar Trust.

PUT CASH IN HIS POCKET.

Given an Ominous Hint That He Might Drop Into River and Not Come Up.

A Plainfield end to the alleged illegal operations of the Sugar Trust developed yesterday when Henry C. Corsa, of 530 East Second street, a former government employee who worked as assistant to the sugar samplers on the Jersey City docks, told of the operations of the trust and what he had seen of how the samplers were bribed. He is the man named by Wilbur F. Wakeman as having been ordered discharged after he brought in to the department evidence of graft among the samplers and assistant samplers on the Jersey docks. He was a civil service employee.

One of his duties while he worked as assistant to the samplers was to carry a tray of little pots in which samples had been placed by the samplers to a locked vault where they were to remain until removed by the appraisers. En route he found that the assistant samplers were actually passing with their trays through a cellar near the docks, in which was the trust's official briber. This man would dump them out and refill them from a hogshead of damp, spoiled sugar kept there for that purpose.

"I went into the custom house," said Mr. Corsa yesterday, "with an attitude of mind toward the government that was very dear to me. One day when I saw the assistants taking their trays through the trust's agents cellar I was told: 'You're in on this, old man; mum's the word—there's money enough to go round in it—don't be a squealer, and take your bit and shut up.' At first I took my tray along with the others down to the agent's cellar and saw the samples dumped and the spoiled sugar put in its place. I didn't understand just the meaning of it all the first day.

"But one day I was coming out of the washroom and another assistant said to me, 'You've got your money, old man; it's in your coat pocket. I got mine, too. See-' And then this man pulled out some bills. I felt in my pocket, and, sure enough, there was my roll of bills. I knew the trust agent well enough by that time. I also knew the other briber who kept tab on the Williamsburg docks.

"Now, I saw that this thing was general all over the docks. I didn't blame the men so much. They were poor as I was, and the money was a blessing to them. My first few bits got up to $80 while I was thinking it over what to do. Then I thought of my old friend Mr. Treat, who was internal revenue collector, and a man engaged in financial business of the government. I decided to seek his advice.

"He gave me a conference and told me he had to face just such corruption every day in his own department, but that he kept on the fight against it.

"Next time my 'bit' came around into my pocket by the washroom process I went to Mr. Wakeman, the appraiser. I gave him the money, told him what was going on and went back to work. He thanked me, said he would be always grateful and told me to keep watching and come and tell him all I could find out.

"Now, soon after that, Mr. Wakeman had all the samplers and assistant samplers in before him. They had to suspect some one. Suspicion fell upon me. I was cursed on the docks and it was hinted that one of these days if I didn't look out I'd drop off and not come up again. I told Wakeman of the feeling and he said to keep by my post and he'd protect me and back me up. And he always did. The bribers kept away from me, though I guess because they, too, suspected."

Mr. Corsa then told of Mr. Wakeman's removal and his own subsequent discharge with the seven year's fruitless struggle for reinstatement.

More Successful Hunters.

Four more Plainfielders returned from a successful hunting expedition last night. The total casualities of the trip were forty rabbits, five quail, one woodcock and one English pheasant. In the party were William Feiring, Samuel Fields, Police Sergeant Herbert Overbaugh and Harry Hicks. During their absence they were the guests of Mr. Fields' uncle at Croton, four miles from Flemington.

MAN ATTEMPTS TO HUG 8-YEAR-OLD PUPIL

What at first appeared to be a case of attempted kidnapping of Minnie Graney, an eight-year-old girl, in Sherman School, Cranford, Tuesday afternoon, by a man claiming to be her father, was frustrated by the presence of mind of Miss Grace Watson, acting principal.

When the man called and asked to see his daughter, she was brought to the reception-room, where the man attempted to embrace her. The girl burst into tears and begged Miss Watson to take her away. She was sent to another room and the man ordered to leave, which he refused to do.

The janitor was told to eject him and finally persuaded him to leave. Supervising Principal A. L. Johnson was telephoned for and immediately went to the school, sending for Policeman James Hennessy, who was asked to hunt up the alleged father. The latter was found on the street and brought in, where he was questioned by Mr. Johnson.

He said his name was Michael Dico and that his wife ran away from him a year ago and he had been unable to locate her. Friends in New York told him of the whereabouts of his daughter and that his wife had resumed her maiden name of Graney, and was employed as a cook at the Cranford Hotel.

He exhibited a photograph of himself, with his daughter held in his arms. Minnie said he was her father, but she had forgotten him. Mr. Johnson says the man told a number of conflicting stories about himself. He was allowed to go on his promise to leave town and not molest the child, and he departed, declaring that he would take legal proceedings to gain possession of the girl.

CONVICT AND DEPUTY FIGHT ON PRISON WALL.

One of the most daring escapes from the New Jersey State Prison took place early Tuesday evening, when a convict climbed on top of one of the buildings, fought a desperate battle in a tower with a deputy and stole the latter's revolver and got away.

He was caught half an hour later in a railroad tunnel in South Trenton.

The man who took such a desperate chance of gaining his freedom was David Carberry, thirty years old, of Hudson County. He is serving a ten-year term for breaking and conspiracy, and was reeived at the prison on December 2, 1907. He worked as a printer before he was sent to prison.

He was employed in the mat shop. At about 5:20 Tuesday evening while the men were filing out of the shops, he slipped from the line and slid down an elevator shaft to the ground floor of the prison. The door was open and Carberry went into the yard. He had a piece of rope which he had made in the mat shop, and with this he drew himself to the top of the wall, where he was discovered by Deputy Daniel Haggerty. As the guard approached Carberry struck him in the stomach with a ball of tin foil. This knocked the breath out of the guard and the prisoner jumped at him. Getting the keeper's finger in his mouth, Carberry nearly bit it off. Haggerty finally got him by the throat and Carberry said he would give up.

As Haggerty released his grip the convict again attacked him, and this time he secured the guard's revolver, with which he hit Haggerty over the head and made his escape down the wall. The pistol exploded in the struggle and other guards came.

The prisoner lost his hat on top of the deathhouse and he ran bareheaded down Third street to Cass, where he turned and made his way up the back streets. Keeper Osborne had just left the prison and was on his way home across the street when he heard the shot fired. He summoned a number of deputies and sent them out in different directions. Mr. Osborne had a suspicion that the escaped man would try to get across the river and he was right. Carberry was walking through the tunnel at South Trenton. He will be kept on a diet of bread and water for a week.

Great Crash in China!

Stupendous Sale

the Result of a $35,000 Purchase Direct From Foreign Potteries

The mighty organization of which this store is an important part has made it possible for us to engineer another gigantic deal by which we come into possession of about $70,000 worth of fine chinaware at just about half its value. This big purchase, direct from big foreign potteries, was made by the personel representative of this establishment during his last European tour. Part of this china goes to other stores, but fully $20,000 worth has been shipped to Hahne & Co., and we will immediately inaugurate.

A Sale at About Half Price

Lasting Until Thanksgiving

This big lot of china includes thousands of Cake Plates, Salad Bowls, Fruit Bowls, Celery Trays, Bread Plates, Butter Plates, Tea Plates, Breakfast Plates, Dinner Plates, Fruit Dishes, Syrup Cups and Plates, Cereal Dishes, Spoon and Sugar Baskets, Nut Bowls, Pudding Sets, Covered Berry Dishes, Spoon Dishes, Olive Dishes, Mustard Cups, Chocolate Pots, Tea Cups and Saucers, Coffee Cups and Saucers, Bouillon Cups and Saucers, Pin Trays, Comb and Brush Trays, Sugar and Cream Sets, Teapot, Sugar and Cream Sets, Cream Jars, Berry Sets.

The decorations are very beautiful and widely varied, including a large number of splendid border decorations, some floral effects and a large variety of the more heavily decorated sort covered with flowers in gorgeous colors, some of which are hand-painted—many superb specimens in the collection. Then there are fruit decorations galore, and there are medallions with scenic centers, some with portraits; besides there are dainty white and gold decorations.

It is an opportunity that no one can afford to miss.

They are not seconds—not passe patterns, but strictly first grade china, decorated by the highest class artists—up-to-date in every particular. In many patterns one can form Tea Sets, Coffee Sets and Small Cottage Sets if desired. The pieces are all priced separately, however, and one can buy one or a thousand pieces, and in hardly any instance will the price be more than half what the same quality and character of wares have been sold at in this establishment.

If you could have been here the past couple of weeks and seen cask after cask being unpacked by any army of workers and realized the enormous quantity of chinaware that is going into this sale, and appreciated the true beauty of the shapes and decorations, you would be just as enthusiastic as we are over our achievement which brings to the people of Newark such tremendous savings.

There will doubtless be a steady rush tomorrow and Saturday and all the other days of this sale up to Thanksgiving. There are hardly any families in Newark or round about that cannot buy some of this china to great advantage for home use or for gift-giving, for fairs or for card party prizes.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

Some time ago the executive committee of the United States Golf Association drafted an interpretation of general rule No. 11 as follows:

If a ball lie on or within a club's length of a drain cover, water pipe or hydrant, it may be lifted and dropped without penalty as near as possible to the place where it lay, but not nearer the hole. ("As near as possible" shall mean within a club's length).

Now comes another announcement from the secretary's office to the effect that a further interpretation has been made to general rule No. 11 to read as follows:

If it be impossible, for want of space or other cause, for a player to drop the ball in conformity with this interpretation, he shall place the ball as near as possible within the limits laid down in this interpretation, but not nearer the hole.

A comparison of the United States Golf Association's new ticket for officers and committeemen with the present incumbents reveals few changes. The first is that of W. A. Alexander, of the Exmoor Country Club, who is named to fill the office now held by Silas W. Strawn as first vice-president. The committeemen named are C. T. Jaffray, Minikahda Club; Joseph S. Clark, Philadelphia Cricket Club; Arden M. Robbins, Garden City Golf Club, and A. B. Dick, Onwentsia Club. There is only one change. The last named will take the place of Jarvis Hunt, of Chicago.

STATE SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS MEET

From every part of New Jersey delegates began to assemble in East Orange yesterday to attend the fifty-first annual convention of the State Sunday-School Association, which opened later in the day in the Munn Avenue Presbyterian church. With an address of welcome by Governor John Franklin Fort and a long list of addresses by Sunday-school workers of international fame, the convention, which will continue for three days, promises to be one of the most important events in the history of the New Jersey association.

Showery weather seemed to dampen the enthusiasm of the first delegates to arrive, but a cheerful atmosphere soon prevailed in the various reception rooms as friendships were renewed among the delegates and as all indulged in an informal discussion of Sunday-school work.

Through the efforts of the local committees in charge every arrangement has been made for the convenience and comfort of the delegates. Every available room in the large church edifice and the Reasoner Memorial chapel has been used for the various departments of the Sunday-school Association. In addition to the accommodations at the church, Commonwealth Hall, a block west in Main street, has been fitted up as a restaurant.

In order to accommodate the large chorus for the special musical program a platform has been built directly in front of the pulpit in the main auditorium of the church. The first session to be held in this room took place yesterday, at which there was a representative delegation from every county, notwithstanding the discouraging weather.

In the reports made by the various officers at the morning session it was shown that while remarkable progress has been made in a number of departments, the most encouraging word coming from others was that the work was at a standstill. Although Rev. E. Morris Fergusson, the general secretary, was able to announce an increased number of officers, teachers and scholars, he was also obliged to admit that the number of schools contributing to the general work was somewhat less than that of last year, and that the figure was quite short of that of two years ago.

The most important event yesterday was the meeting of the State executive committee of which Walter M. Irving, of Camden, is chairman. One of the first items considered was the place for the next convention and an invitation was received from the Atlantic County Sunday-school Association to hold next year's meeting in Atlantic City. Arrangements were made for having the formal invitation given at the session last night by Rev. Dr. A. W. Bailey, president of the Atlantic County association.

Preliminary reports were also made by the following: Rev. William E. Foote, of Freehold, for the teacher-training department; Rev. James E. Church, of Somerville, for the adult class, and Abram Duryee, of Hackettstown, for the evangelistic committee. The report of the treasurer, Edward W. Dunham, of Trenton, was also presented to the committee. This report showed a slight deficiency.

Somerset Council, No. 104, Jr. O. U. A. M., will enjoy an interesting program at its meeting tomorrow night.

HOLD BAZAAR AND SALE AT ST. PETER'S CHURCH

A bazaar and sale was inaugurated in St. Peter's German Lutheran church on Grove street last night under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of that congregation. There was a big turnout of members and friends of the church and there is every indication that the affair will be a success and a substantial fund raised for the general church fund. The affair will be continued this afternoon and tonight and tomorrow afternoon and night.

The interior of the church is arranged in attractive style. There are three departments all of which were liberally patronized. One of the popular busines centers was the Japanese room which was decorated with Oriental parasols and lanterns. In this department tea was served and fancy articles sold. In charge were Miss Agnes Ruschke and Miss Pauline Smith.

The Junior Aid Society is also taking a leading part in the bazaar by conducting a booth in which toys and ornamental articles are sold. The booth is attractively decorated in orange and white, the colors of the society. Rudolph Heinold and Adolph Duerschner are supervisors over this department.

Fancy and household articles are on sale at the booth of the Ladies' Aid Society, which is in charge of Mrs. Richard Moldenke, Mrs. Pauline Smith and Mrs. Mary Stengel. The Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Duerschner are also assisting in the affair.

At Proctor's.

An entire new vaudeville bill will be offered at Proctor's thearte today for the rest of the week, and it will be of the best, including 'The Circle of Death;" McKiltie Duo, Scotch musicians, who can play the bag-pipes and clarionet; The Great DuBois, one of the most marvelous magical acts on the stage. The films d'art improve every day and continue to be of the same high-class.

Preparations for Confirmation.

Five candidates are enrolled in the confirmation class which will be started at St. Peter's German Lutheran church next Sunday morning at 9:30 o'clock. Applications for membership can be made to the pastor, the Rev. J. E. Duerschner.

TWO ITALIAN WOMEN FIGHT WITH KNIVES

A star boarder figured in a case in which two Italian women were the principals before Recorder Doliver in the borough police court this morning. Mrs. Nuzietta Popolilla, of 39 Watchung avenue, the defendant, was arrested yesterday by Chief Weiss on complaint of Mrs. Palmina Veneza, who charged the former with beating her in a scrap which occurred on Race street on Tuesday morning.

It developed in the testimony that the women met at the store of Mrs. Bloom on that street, and that the trouble really began when Mrs. Popolilla charged the Venezia woman as being responsible for a boarder leaving her domicile to live at the Venezia home. The argument became so warm that it resulted in a rough and tumble fight in which the Venezia woman, who is in a delicate condition, was badly worsted.

V. W. Nash, Jr., who represented the complainant, brought out in the testimony that his client drew a dirk from her dress and attempted to stab Mrs. Popolilla, alleging that she acted in self-defense. It was also brought out that the Popolilla woman appeared later at the Bloom store with a knife.

As the testimony conflicted on both sides, Recorder Dolliver overlooked the fist fight between the women and fined each five dollars for carrying knives.

There were several exciting periods during the testimony. Mrs. Popolilla became so excited while she was on the stand that she made an effort to dash over the railing at her alleged rival. Chief Weiss, however, was close at hand and prevented additional hostilities by grabbing Mrs. Popolilla and locking her in a cell. Twenty minutes behind the bars, however, had a cooling effect on the latter, and she was very docile the remainder of the hearing.

Another outbreak was threatened at the close of the trial when all of the Italian witnesses and principals got together and apparently began to line up for an all around scrap, but when Chief Weiss threatened to lock all hands up, they dispersed.

Mrs. Bloom contributed a lively incident to the hearing while she was on the stand narrating her story of the fracas. She had just finished telling her story when Lawyer Nash asked her in what manner the Popolilla woman attacked Mrs. Venezia.

Mrs. Bloom, who tips the scales close to 200 pounds, was quick to respond and gave a practical demonstration by grabbing the attorney around the body and subjecting him to quite a severe shaking. "That's enough, I understand," articulated Mr. Nash, almost breathlessly, and everybody had a hearty laugh.

Will Change Constitution.

A committee comprising Hollis Cubberly, Miss Edna Cronce and Miss Hattie Mattison was appointed to go over the constitution and make it more practical. The committee will report in two weeks.

Overseer of the Poor Lewis Schneider, of the borough, finds himself betwe n two fires in the case of Isaac Stevens, colored, who has applied to the borough authorities for assistance. When Stevens put his application before the board of health, Mr. Schneider consulted with borough Attorney Hetfield. After this course had been taken the Borough Council instructed Overseer Schnieder to render assistance to Stevens, and it is understood that the overseer followed out the instructions. As there is some question as to whether the borough is legally bound to take care of Stevens several citizens entertain the belief that it was the duty of Schneider to follow out the suggestion of the borough attorney instead of obeying the mandate of the borough fathers. Stevens recently had a foot amputated as a result of blood poisoning. It is understood that he has a couple of daughters and a son who are amply able to support him. They reside at Lincoln. It is the general opinion that Borough Attorney Hetfield will take legal steps, if necessary, against the relatives of Stevens, in an effort to have them bear his support.

Exercises appropriate to Thanksgiving will be held in the borough and village schools next Wednesday afternoon.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS AT TURKEY SUPPER

The annual turkey supper under the auspices of the Women's Society for Christian Work held at the Seventh-Day Baptist church last night was a great success. There was a large attendance and more than one hundred suppers were served from 6 to 8 o'clock. The Sunday-school rooms were appropriately decorated for the occasion with autumn leaves, chrysanthemums, pumpkins, cornstalks and other things in harmony with the harvest season.

An excellent supper was served under the direction of a committee of which Mrs. Marcus L. Clawson was the chairman. Her assistants were Mrs. O. S. Rogers, Mrs. N. O. Moore, Jr., Mrs O B. Whitford, Miss Mary T Greene and Mrs. A C Rogers. The young women of the church acted as waitresses.

After the supper there was an entertainment which was enjoyed by all. This was arranged by Mrs. Clarence W. Spicer and Mrs. Ira N. West, who also had charge of the decorations. Clarence W. Spicer announced the numbers. The program comprised phonograph selections under the directions of William C. Hubbard, vocal solos by Miss Nan Randolph and Roy Titsworth; an instrumental duet, cornet and saxaphone and cornet, N. O. Moore, Jr., and Clarence W. Spicer; Thanksgiving story by Miss Nellie Williams and recitations by Stephanie Shaw and Harold Spicer. Mrs. William C. Hubbard presided at the piano and assisted largely in making the entertainment a success.

A feature of the affair was the reading of the Thanksgiving proclamation, issued by President Taft, by the pastor, Rev. Edwin Shaw. This is the annual custom and always proves interesting. The social features were fully enjoyed, affording an opportunity for the members and friends of the congregation to become better acquainted.

LIVED FOR A YEAR OVER CENTURY MARK.

At the ripe old age of 101 years, Thomas Thornton, a relative of Matthew Thornton, the American legislator and signer of the Declaration of Independence from New Hampshire, died Tuesday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Edward Courtney, 104 Bellevue avenue, Trenton, of complications resulting from old age.

The funeral will take place Friday morning from his late residence. Solemn high mass will be celebrated in St. Mary's Cathedral at 9 o'clock and interment will be in St. Mary's cemetery.

Thomas Thornton was born in Galway County, Ireland, in 1808, and lived there until about 1850, when he came to this country with his wife.

After arriving in this country Mr and Mrs. Thomas Thornton lived for a time in New York, but later took up their residence near Lambertville, where Mr. Thornton was employed on a farm. At the outbreak of the Civil War Mr. Thornton offered his services to the government as a soldier, but was refused, as he was too old. He was then about fifty-three years of age. He purchased a little farm in the vicinity of Lambertville, which he conducted until about thirty years ago, when he moved with his family to Trenton, and had since lived retired.

Up until this year the aged couple always celebrated their wedding anniversary. He leaves a widow and two daughters.

Worth Considering.

"The tree grows as the twig is bent." "The child is the father of the man." If you want your boy to be happy and wealthy in manhood, train him for it now. Get him a pass book from this bank and he will soon learn the value of a bank account. The money he will save by the time he is twenty-one will be valuable to him but the habit of economy and knowledge of banking will be of even greater benefit. — BANK NOTES.

WILL NOT TAKE UP THE PEARY-COOK DISPUTE

The National Academy of Science continued its sessions at Princeton yesterday in Guyot Hall. The scientists are not to take up the Peary Cook polar dispute, as was rumored, it being declared yesterday by members of the academy that the controversy cannot be approached under any of the sciences discussed, papers for which have been in preparation for many months.

Some of the members of the academy are connected also with the United States Geological Survey and may at some time in the future take up the question officially, but as a body the academy does not intend to pass upon the polar dispute.

The program for yesterday included a business meeting in the morning, discussion of papers and of the exhibition in the Guyot Museum of recent scientific investigations.

The visitors attended the concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra in Alexander Hall last night and were received at Prospect by President and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson immediately after.

Among the interesting papers presented at the meeting of the academy is that of Professor W. F. Magie, '77, of Princeton's faculty, on the investigations of Professor Joseph Henry, of Princeton.

Professor Magie illustrated some of Professor Henry's discoveries by exhibiting Tuesday some of the apparatus used by Henry. An interesting statement made by Prof. Magie is to the effect that it was professor Henry who sent the first of all wireless messages a distance of 250 feet through Nassau Hall, though at the time no significance was attached to the electric disturbance.

A Thriller at Proctor's.

Every one likes a thrilling sensation, and one may be enjoyed this week at Proctor's in the "Circle of Death," a wonderful exhibit of bicycle riding late from Barnum's circus. A steel sphere made of open design, a dainty rider and a strong bicycle constitute a combination that enables the couple upsetting of all rules of gravity, the rider flying around side walls or ceiling head downward is certainly a thriller. The (Scotch) Kiltie Duo Sidi, who juggles cannons and other things, and the English Illusionist, with his Noah's ark fill out a wonderful bill.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

The benefits of travel cannot be denied. They are inestimable. Travel stimulates new thoughts, broadens the mind, inspires fresh ideas to such an extent that it is a duty as well as a pleasure which we all owe ourselves. Unfortunately it is a duty and pleasure which comparatively few can enjoy, but everybody can indulge in it freely by "traveling with Lyman H. Howe" at Plainfield theatre tomorrow afternoon and night.

The pantomimic comedy, "Eight Bells," which has had such wonderful success everywhere will be seen at the Plainfield theatre matinee and night on Saturday. The Bros. Byrne are a really progressive firm of clever artists, and in this season's production will give their many admirers a rare treat, for they have perfected a number of new and startling tricks, besides several scenic effects that are a marvel of stagecraft. An outlay of a large sum of money by these inimitable pantomimists results in one of the most realistic stage productions before the public, and will convince theatregoers that the Bros. Byrne are head and shoulders over other artists on the pantomimic stage.

The youngest and most recent dramatic star on the American stage, Miss Elsie Ferguson, comes the Plainfield theatre Monday evening. After every critic in New York had pronounced Miss Ferguson worthy of being a star of the first magnitude, the beautiful little actress saw her name emblazoned at the entrance to the Hackett theatre in less than one week after "Such a Little Queen" had been produced. She captivated the Broadway playgoers by her delightful personality, rare personal beauty and infinite charm and magnetism. Her appearance here will be one of the principal dramatic events of the season. The supporting company includes, Frank Gilmore, Ralph Stuart, Francis Byrne, Eleanor Lawson, George W. Barnum, Louis R. Grisel, Stanley G. Wood, Marion Little, Jessie Ralph, A. W. Nuendorf, Kraft Walton, Arthur A. Klein, and many others equally well known.

CHARLES H. CAPEN.

Charles H. Capen, for thirty-four years proprietor of Dorlon's restaurant, at 6 East Twenty-third street, New York, died of apoplexy at his home, 123 West Ninety-second street, Tuesday. He was stricken at his place of business twelve days ago, and had been unconscious from that time until the end. Mr. Capen was born at Nantucket, Mass., sixty-nine years ago. He came to New York in 1860, engaging at first in the wholesale furnishing business.

In 1875 he opened the restaurant on Twenty-third street, which he retained until his death. Two sons, C. Alfred and Fred M. Capen, who survive him, were latterly associated with him in the business. He is survived also by one daughter, Miss Ethel Capen. For thirty years Mr. Capen was a member of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian church, of which he had been a trustee and treasurer for the last fifteen years.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 21, 1909.

Topic.—The blessing of a thankful heart. —Neh. viii. 1-12.

The walls and the temple of Jerusalem at this part of Jewish history had been rebuilt by Nehemiah and Ezra, who had each made two trips from Babylon to do this work. The law of Moses had been arranged by Ezra, the priest, and the people of Israel had become possessors of their various homes. Under these auspicious circumstances "the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that is before the water gate." They asked Ezra to bring the book of the law of Moses. This he did and, assisted by others, read it and explained it to the people. "They read in the book in the law of God distinctly and gave the sense and caused them to understand the reading." Nehemiah and Ezra and the Levites therefore declared that day a holy day, or holiday, and urged them to joy and thanksgiving, "and all the people went their way to eat and to drink and to send portions and to make great mirth because they had understood the words that were declared unto them"—joyous thanksgiving and gratitude that the law of God, so long lost and forgotten, had been read to them and explained to them in such a way that they could understand it. Would that the American people at this season of thanksgiving would more fully appreciate the word of God and be filled with greater desires to have it read and explained to them.

The duty of thanksgiving requires no argument. Ingratitude, whether to God or man, is looked upon as a trait of baseness in the character of any one who practices it. This is especially so in our relation to God, from whom in this final analysis all blessings of life come. The appropriateness of appointed thanksgiving days is also recognized, particularly as applied to nations. In our individual lives and hearts every day should be a day of thanksgiving to God. Israel had regular days for national thanksgiving. The Passover was in reality a thankful remembrance of their deliverance from the land of Egypt and from the house of bondage. Pentecost was a feast of thanksgiving for the first fruits of the harvest, which were a prophecy of a full harvest, and when the harvest itself had been gathered in the feast of the tabernacles expressed gratitude to God for it. Then, upon particular occasions, such as the one before us, especial days of thanksgiving were appointed. Our national Thanksgiving day is a permanent one by an unwritten law of our land. The nation should make it not merely a holiday, but a holy day, when in the midst of our feasting and mirth we should acknowledge the hand of God in our national life and express our sincerest gratitude unto Him for blessings past and present and implore before His throne their continuance for the future.

Thankfulness of heart and of life have a reflex influence. They give to the one who is truly thankful increased blessings. Every time we recall the blessings of God and thank Him for them we experience again the joy that possessed us when they were first bestowed upon us. The thankful heart increases its blessings, while the unthankful one diminishes them. There is joy in the possession of a spirit of thankfulness and also a joy in expressing it. If we would get the very best out of the good things of life we should therefore be constantly thankful for the benefits and blessings divinely bestowed upon us.

But thanksgiving must not end with the heart or the tongue. It should extend to good deeds. The Israelites were not exhorted to "eat the fat and drink the sweet" alone, but to share with those who were not provided for. This they did, and their joy was increased thereby. Are you thankful for the blessings and benefits of the past year? Then express it by sending portions to others not so richly blessed. In so doing you will receive a blessing and give another cause for joy and thanksgiving.

BIBLE READINGS.

Ps. xxxiv, 1-8; i, 14, 15; lxviii, 19; c, ciii, 1-5; cvii, 1-6; Mark v, 18-21; Acts ii, 44-47; iii, 1-10; II Cor. ix, 8-11; Phil. iv, 1-6; Col. ii, 6, 7; iv, 2; Rev. vii, 11, 12.

The Church's Factory.

No church can live long that lives on its past, however long that past may be. A church lives through the supply of fresh workers, just as a body lives through the supply of fresh blood corpuscles. And just as the body must have a factory—the stomach and the heart and the lungs—for making the fresh blood corpuscles and distributing them where they are needed, so the church must have a factory for making new workers and fitting them into their places in the church, the places that the older church workers are so rapidly leaving vacant. And so a society of Christian Endeavor is of value not in proportion as its members make eloquent speeches, but as they are training themselves to speak for Christ in the years to come. We are not to consider the amount of their gifts to missions, but whether they are training themselves to give liberally and wisely as their power to give increases. We are not to regard the value of what they do in their committees so much as the efficiency of that committee work in training them for similar work when they grow up. And so of all the rest of our Christian Endeavor activities. What is the product of our Christian Endeavor factory? The church has a right to know. We shall be wise if we look to it with care.—Amos R. Wells in Christian Endeavor World.

CHAPTER XI.

THE WOMAN WHO TEMPTED HIM.

JENNY, who had been hidden in her little room during this long interview, waiting, watchful for an opportunity to see Philip alone, now entered the larger apartment swiftly and darted to the window.

Where were they going? She looked out of the window. Would Joe carry out his promise? She had paid him for his service.

She saw a boy run out of a doorway, speak to Philip and give him a note.

She was all prepared for him. She had taken off her dress and put on a soft wrapper of yellow and black, with her daintiest, flimsiest things underneath and just a touch of perfume. She had let down her thick hair and left it hanging over her shoulders. Then she had opened a bottle of gold dust fluid and carefully applied little dabs of it to her arms and shoulders, where it remained in shining blotches.

Poor Jenny! She built such high hopes upon this primitive ruse of hers, this trap of her physical attractions laid for the man whom she worshiped and would have served so loyally and with a devotion that asked so little in return. This was what life had taught her. The dregs through which she had waded clung to her. She believed that through them she could attain her high purpose, for her love for Philip was high and true, compact of the noblest aspirations, the best of all of her.

She would not stoop to the base use of her knowledge of Margaret's relationship. Mr. Jackson had saved her from that baseness, but all was fair in love, and she was beautiful. That weapon, given her, she would employ.

Presently the door opened. "Who's there?" she called.

"It's I," replied Philip. "Hello! Are you here?"

"Yes," confusedly. "I—er—I was fixing up the room. I did not expect you."

The girl came forward, walking rather unsteadily. "I don't feel well," she said. "It is a sort of dizziness." She put her hand to her eyes.

"You're weak and faint," exclaimed Philip. "You must sit down."

Jenny sat down obediently.

"Has Joe Caffrey been here?" asked Philip.

"No."

"He wants to see me."

Jenny sighed faintly.

"Want a blanket around you?"

"No; I'm too hot already. Maybe I have fever." She held out her hand.

"Your hand is warm," said Philip, "but it seems all right to me."

He drew up a chair and sat down at her side.

"I'm so unhappy, Phil," murmured Jenny. "What can I do? Tell me, Phil. You're the only one I can turn to, and—oh, it's awfully hard!"

"I know, Jenny, but"—

"I've tried to do right, haven't I? I've taken any old kind of work, and, God knows, $5 a week isn't much for a girl who's lived as I have. Why, $5 a day wouldn't pay for the flowers I used to get. Haven't I come down and lived and worked in this rotten place and never kicked?"

"Indeed you have, Jenny. You've been fine," said Philip earnestly.

"Sometimes I ask myself what's the use of being decent. Who cares?"

"We all care."

Jenny smiled wistfully. "Do you care, Phil? I did it all for you."

"You did it because it was right, Jenny," he said gravely, but he felt vaguely uncomfortable under her pleading eyes.

"Phil," she went on, "you don't know how hard my work is. This gold dust stuff seems to eat right into me, and I can't get it off. See here," and she showed him the marks.

He gazed at the gilt marks on her neck and spoke sympathetically to her.

Jenny interrupted him.

"Phil, do you ever think of the old days—before I was married? You said I was pretty."

"You were pretty," he answered unsteadily, "and—and you are pretty."

How his pulses throbbed!

"Yes?" she brightened. "And, Phil, you kissed me once. I remember what you said."

"What did I say?" he faltered.

"You said my lips were the sweetest things you ever tasted."

He rose in agitation.

"I must go, Jenny," he said. "I—I can't wait."

"Not yet, Phil," she begged, and, swiftly changing the ground of her attack, she spoke of her life with such humble sadness that Philip, touched and reassured, sat down again. It seemed, she said, as if an evil star hung over her. Why should George have been killed? If he had been spared her everything would have been different. And if they hadn't taken away her little baby and let it die then still she would have had something to live for. Her voice broke as she spoke of her baby. And if that selfish woman hadn't left her husband alone then, perhaps even then, she would have kept straight. But things had been too hard for her. She hadn't had a fair chance, and—

She turned to Philip with her whole soul in her eyes. "Tell me, Phil, do you think me a wicked girl?"

"No, Jenny, I—I don't."

"Oh, thank you!" she cried.

"Sit closer to me—here. People get lonely, don't they, Phil?"

Her eyes were burning on him.

"Ye-es."

"And want to be loved, don't they?"

"I—I suppose so."

"And—sometimes petted?"

He could not speak; he could only look at her, at her swimming eyes and her red, half parted lips. She trembled with the love that scars and sears, but will have its way. For a moment she met his eyes and then with swift passion caught him in her arms.

"I love you!" she cried passionately. "Oh, how I love you!"

She kissed him full on the lips again and again, and he returned her kisses.

Then at this moment of peril—then suddenly some power in him cleared his brain, and in a flash of sober vision he saw Margaret, his Margaret, looking at him with grave reproof. With sudden revulsion he broke away from her, crying:

"What a dog I am!"

Jenny, disillusioned, humiliated, rose quickly and stood looking at him. A bottle on the table caught his attention. It was the little flask of liquid gold. The truth suddenly flashed upon him. She had been playing a part; she had tricked him here to—to destroy him.

"You little devil!" he cried.

"Phil!" she cried in fear.

"Let me see those stains," he ordered, and he tore her wrapper open, exposing her neck. He rubbed his fingers over the stains.

"Ah, I thought so! You said it wouldn't come off. It comes off quite easily. You were lying to me."

"No," she said weakly.

He opened the bottle.

"I say you were lying. It's the same stuff. You brought it here; you put it on your shoulders; you—you"—

"I didn't mean any harm."

"No harm!" he shouted. "Heavens! What do you call harm? Because you hate the girl I love you get me here by tricks and lies. Joe Caffery never sent that note!"

"He wrote it, Phil."

"You made him write it. If he wanted to see me he'd be here. You wanted to get me here—alone."

He paused.

"Do you—do you own up?"

"Yes," she said faintly.

"Phil, I—I did it because"—

"You're bad all through."

Jenny shrank in despair.

"I am bad all through?" she said quietly. "All right. I got you here by a trick? That's true. And I hate the girl you love? You bet I do!

"But what are you?" she flamed. "You are a loyal lover; you are a preacher of reform, Philip Ames, but you held me in your arms, and you kissed my mouth!"

She paused, then added:

"And you liked it! You liked it!"

She showed the scorn of the woman for the man who is weak and places the blame on her.

Philip sank into a chair, crushed, burying his face in his hands. How could he ever face Margaret again?

Jenny forgot herself, her defeat, in the desire to console the beloved one. It was a sister's feeling, pure, compassionate, unselfish.

She knelt beside him and compassionately whispered his name.

He rose with hatred in his voice:

"Don't speak to me."

The tone drove her to a desperate determination.

"Do you mean that?" she asked.

"Yes, I mean it."

Philip's voice was that of the man who echoes the weak plea of the first man: The woman tempted me.

"Then it's all off," Jenny said briskly. Her mind was made up.

She went to her room and returned with hat and cloak.

"I am going. I won't trouble you any more. Goodby."

Philip did not grasp the horrible meaning of her words.

Jenny still had a lingering hope. But Philip neither moved nor spoke. So she said her final farewell, pleadingly:

"I am sorry, Phil—but I—I loved you, and when a girl as bad as I am loves a man—it is"—

The door closed behind her.

Haggleton found Philip in the room an hour later.

"I have had an unpleasant experience," said the son.

"With Jenny Moran?"

"Yes; it was Jenny. I tried to help her."

Haggleton brushed some face powder off Philip's sleeve. Philip blushed.

"I see," he said, then resolutely, "She's in love with you?"

"Love!" answered Philip, with loathing.

"H'm!" mused Haggleton, brushing some more face powder off the lapel of Philip's coat. "Next time I would advise you to help some older and homelier female."

Haggleton proceeded to give the young man a little lesson in practical worldly wisdom.

"Nothing has happened, has there?" he asked.

"I took her in my arms. I kissed her."

"It is a little thing."

"Little?" Philip's voice grew bitter. "If I cannot control myself in little things, how can I control myself in big things? I am engaged to a fine, pure girl. I must tell her, and she will despise me."

Haggleton slowly walked up and down with him.

"Why tell her?" he asked. "She has a right to know anything serious, but this isn't serious. You love her, don't you?"

"Love her? I worship her! Oh!"

"You don't care for this other woman?" persisted Haggleton.

"No! indeed not!"

"Then you are easy with your conscience. It would be cowardly to tell her. You would simply transfer the regret from your shoulders to hers. It would cause her needless pain. Repentance is best done in silence when open confession means suffering to others."

"By George, you are right!" exclaimed Philip. "I must not tell her."

He added:

"It's wonderful how you see the best thing to do. I don't know why I speak of it, but I—I feel a sympathy for you, sir. I used to think you were—sort of inhuman, but you've been kind to me, and—you have taught me a lot. Sometimes," Philip went on, puzzling, "I have thought that I have two natures, one from my mother, the other"—his face darkened—"from my father."

"What about your father?"

"My father was not a good man, Mr. Haggleton. He—he pretty well broke my mother's heart."

"How do you know that he was cruel to her?"

"I know how she suffered."

"But she never said what your father did?"

"I never asked. I just grew up with the idea that my life was set apart for a special work. I have a trade for my living, but my real work is to help the poor. But sometimes I feel another thing urging me—a hateful, infernal thing, urging me toward money and—and all that."

Philip's voice was anxious.

"That is why this Jenny affair is so serious. It shows the weakness in me."

Haggleton, seeing his opportunity to strengthen the ultimate position in which the last, the decisive struggle must be fought, grasped it with determination.

"We are all weak, my boy," he said (and how sweet it was to say those two words, "my boy"). "I will show you how weak I am. It isn't entirely to study the problem of poverty that I am down here."

"No?" Philip looked interested.

"Years ago I did something that I—regret—something wrong. And—Gentle knows it."

"Gentle!"

"Yes. I am making amends for that wrong now."

Haggleton stopped, getting ready for his final argument.

"You will not try to find out what it is that I did in the past?"

"I certainly won't. It is not for me to judge another man."

"And if Gentle should try to tell you?"

"I won't let him tell me."

CHAPTER XII.

MARGARET AND HAGGLETON.

MARGARET LAWRENCE meanwhile was going her way, doing good.

Philip's letters were full, moreover, of admiring praise of this mysterious Mr. Jackson, whom she had vaguely seen that one morning in the Moran home. His letters still were filled with protestations of love, but they were promises also of idleness, of riches, things that she, in her youthful enthusiasm, scorned. Yes, Philip was changing, and not for the better.

It was with happy anticipation, therefore, that she left the "case" which she had successfully nourished back to health and returned to Mrs. Binney's boarding house. She would have time now to take her worldly minded lover in hand and to bring him back to the path of loving service to the poor.

On the doorstep of Mrs. Binney's house she met Gentle, who looked very serious.

"Miss Lawrence," he said rapidly, "will you find Philip at once? There has been an accident in the river. Atkinson, one of the divers, is caught in a wreck, and he is needed. You will find him at the Morans', talking bakeshop to Mr. Jackson, I suppose."

Margaret ran all the way on her mission.

She found Philip in the Morans' rooms in consultation with Mr. Jackson. The elder man considerately turned, giving them an opportunity for a loverlike greeting.

"Philip," she said hastily, "Atkinson has been caught in a wreck. Mr. Gentle sends me to tell you to come at once."

Philip was alert at once. He started for the door.

"Phil," shouted Margaret, running after him, "you are not going into danger?"

"Danger? I am going to get Atkinson out of that wreck."

Haggleton and Margaret looked at each other curiously. They had not met yet and had seen each other only once—on the day of the millionaire's arrival at the tenement, when the two child boarders had been taken to the hospital. Haggleton looked at Margaret and approved of her appearance. She looked like a gentlewoman, every inch of her. But what attitude would she take when she came to learn his true name, still more his relationship to Philip?

He stepped forward.

"My name is Jackson, Miss Lawrence. I am Mr. Ames' partner."

Margaret looked at him intently. Then she backed away from him.

"Jackson!" she exclaimed bitterly. "No, your name is Haggleton. You are John J. Haggleton! I know you for what you are!"

Haggleton searched in his memory. A light began to dawn upon his features, which changed from doubt to certainty, to dismay.

"You are the daughter"— he began.

"Yes, I am the daughter of William Lawrence, the man you ruined and dishonored."

"Business made it unavoidable, Miss Lawrence"—

"Business! Yes, business as you practice it."

"Oh, now, that's going too far! I want to explain to you."

Margaret shook her head.

"I won't listen to you," she said, violently agitated.

"You have strong prejudices, Miss Lawrence."

"Yes, against disloyalty and dishonesty."

Haggleton reflected. This complication dismayed him. Was the ghost of his guilty past, which he had made harmless through Philip's promise never to allow Gentle to tell him of it, to be conjured up against him by this young woman? A second later he was again Haggleton, master of circumstances.

"Suppose I admit that I did your father a wrong. Suppose also that I wish to make amends."

"I don't believe it."

"Suppose I tear down this block, 'lung block'—suppose I tear it down and make a fine playground of it in memory of your father—and call it Lawrence park?"

"Lawrence park?" Margaret's eyes shone with enthusiasm.

"Lawrence park where 'lung block' used to stand," she repeated softly to herself. But her grievance welled up suddenly.

"You know how to tempt me," she said bitterly, "but I could never be friends with you."

"If it isn't friends," he said briefly, "then it is enemies."

"Yes, enemies always! I do not trust you, John J. Haggleton. Why are you living in a tenement under an assumed name? You must have some selfish purpose."

"No; my purpose is not selfish."

"Why do you want to make friends with me?" she continued. "Why do you care what I do?"

Again Haggleton changed his tactics. She was bewildered already.

"I'll tell you frankly," he answered, "I do not want you to influence Philip against me."

The effect was what Haggleton had foreseen. Margaret's thoughts turned from her own grievance to a new and nearer preoccupation.

"Influence Philip against you!" she wondered. "What do you care for Philip? Influence a poor master diver against John J. Haggleton?"

Her glance strayed to Phil's picture on the wall. Something that she had never seen before in it struck her. She remembered what Gentle had told her concerning the mystery of her lover's parentage.

She turned to Haggleton, scrutinized his features, then sank down in a chair.

"Oh," she cried in horror, "you are Philip's father!"

She was overwhelmed.

"Phil," she said, "whom I love and whom I have promised to marry. You are his father, and you ruined mine! It is horrible!"

Haggleton waited a few moments patiently. It was wiser to let these overwhelming impressions make their effect one by one for a little while in her mind than to hustle them out of it, to return later perhaps with tenfold strength. He still held much in reserve. When he judged that the proper moment had come—Margaret had wiped her eyes several times and finally tucked away her handkerchief—he resumed the interview.

"Philip knows nothing of this."

He would, of course, not think of making such a recommendation to his neighbors and patrons, were it not that his years and years of success with D. D. D. Prescription enables him to speak of this remedy with confidence. It is a gentle, soothing wash with the mild oil of wintergreen as a base. All the cures seem to be permanent, at any rate, a trial bottle at 25 cents will take away the itch at once—instantly. We are sure of this.

ORGANIZING BOWLING IN FRATERNAL CIRCLES

Plainfield is sure to be a hotbed for bowling during the coming winter months. In addition to the projected reorganization of the Fraternal League, Plainfield Lodge of Elks at a meeting last night, decided to enter a team in the Elks League. The league is rated to be one of the strongest bowling organizations in the east as on the various teams are found crack pinners who are well known in tenpin circles in the cities in which they reside.

In addition to Plainfield, the circuit includes New York, Jersey City, Newark, Elizabeth, Rahway and New Brunswick. Elizabeth and Plainfield are newcomers in the league taking the places of Kearny and Rutherford lodges, thereby making the circuit more compact.

The local quintet will roll its opening series at Elizabeth on November 30 and all of the home games will be rolled on Campbell's alleys. New Brunswick won the championship last year with Hoboken and Jersey City next in order, while Newark was a good fourth.

The local team will be made up with such celebrities as Chief of Police Kiely, Francis J. Blatz, Harry C. Van Emburgh, Chauncey F. Stout and Edward A. Laing.

BOWLING.

Frank Blatz won two series, Skelly broke even and Schaub lost two, in the individual tourney at Campbell's alleys last night.

Four games were necessary to decide the Blatz-Skelly series the first game resulting in a tie. The scores:

Blatz	202	190	181
Schaub	192	196	173
Skelly	167	201	176	166
Blatz	167	179	212	223
Schaub	211	179	179
Skelly	190	212	191

INDOOR GOLF FOR LOCAL ENTHUSIASTS

Plainfield golfers will have an opportunity to play their favorite game all through the chilly winter days and evening and not even be compelled to use their sweaters. On the contrary they will be compelled to mop the prespiration from their brows and perhaps, play with their shirt sleeves rolled up. All this has been brought about by "Marty" O'Loughlin, the well-known home-bred professional golfer of the Plainfield Country Club.

"Marty" will open an indoor golf school within a few weeks. A suitable place has been selected and it is now being made comfortable and put in first-class condition. A number of the most prominent golfers in the city, including some of the women players, have already joined the school.

A large practice net, which is a patented idea, has been secured and will be placed in position. The net contains several pockets of various sizes and by following a certain key in connection with the net a regular round of golf can be played over the country club or any other links. There will also be regular "carpet" putting greens. Monthly competitions for prizes will be arranged. Certain hours for practice will be restricted to the women only, from 10 a. m. to 3 p. m.

A well-known professional golfer will be on hand at all times to assist "Marty" in giving instructions. In addition to improving ones game, the exercise will be equivalent to a regular course in a gymnasium. The ball can be struck as hard as when playing out-of-doors over a regular course, affording an excellent opportunity for players to keep in practice and improve their game, so that when the spring time comes around they can start right in playing, being further advanced than when they left off in the fall. The school will be opened December 1 in the Marsh building on Park avenue.

A CLUB HOUSE IN THE EAST END

The members of John III Sobelski Society of Plainfield, have about completed the building of their new club house on East Second street, opposite McKinley place. They expect to take possession on Thanksgiving Day, when an entertainment will be held. The society, a Polish one, is formed for religious and fraternal purposes. The present membership is between thirty-five and forty.

The society was organized in 1891. Joe W. Manhattan is the president. There is an increasing interest in the work being done, and inasmuch as the society cannot afford to build a church at present, it was decided to erect a clubhouse.

MRS. KIMBALL MEMORIAL AT CHILDREN'S HOME

As a memorial to the late Mrs. M. E. Kimball, who for so many years was the president of the Children's Home Association, and who in fact devoted the greater part of her life to that work, the members of the association have purchased a grandfather clock of the Seth-Thomas make, and in a few days will be placed in the Home.

The clock, a beautiful piece of workmanship, was purchased by the women through L. Moraller & Son the Park avenue jewelers and clockmakers. The clock is of mahogany, and it is thoroughly equipped with all the astromomical phases and represents the latest achievement in clockmaking.

Mrs. Kimball's devotion to the Home and its work was admired by all who came in contact with this worthy charity and it was largely through her indefatigable efforts that the institution was so generous-supported by residents of Plainfield and North Plainfield.

There was a large attendance of members and attendants of the church and Mr. Mallery was highly gratified by the warm welcome extended to him.

The gathering also had its social features. Phonograph selections were rendred and Mrs. William B. Grannatt gave a number of recitations. Refreshments were also served. The committee in charge consisted of Mrs. Juan A. Babcock, Mrs. J. N. Hull, Mrs. Elizabeth Foster, Mrs. W. Sutton and Mrs. Charles Stace.

CONSIDERING PRISON LABOR FOR THE ROADS

"That man there and others of his calibre should be made to work on the county roads wearing a sign on their backs with the words 'Wife Beater' on it," said Probation Officer Charles Irwin, in the City Criminal Court yesterday at Elizabeth, indicating John White, of that city, who was arraigned before Judge Mahon charged with beating and abusing his wife, Jennie. The Judge told the man that his case would have to be settled by the Grand Jury.

"That's the place for it," said the prisoner.

"All right, you will have to give bail," responded the Judge.

"I won't give bail; I'll go to jail," said White.

Mrs. White's story charged her husband with continually beating and abusing her before their children.

Probation Officer Irwin was serious in recommending a disposition of the prisoner. He said that under a new law the Board of Freeholders has a right to order prisoners of his class to work on the county road under guard while they are confined in the county jail. Mr. Irwin said that the Freeholders, he understood, were favorably considering the law which permits them to compel prisoners to work. The placing of signs on the men's backs, Mr. Irwin said, was his idea and one that would prove effective.

EVANGELIST KEEPS BUSY

Bradford Williams Making Final Pleas in Local Campaign.

AT Y. M. C. A. LAST NIGHT.

Many Meetings Today—His Closing Address Tomorrow Before the Boys at the Y. M. C. A.

Bradford Williams, the Y. M. C. A. evangelist, enters on the final round of his local campaign today with meetings in the local Y. M. C. A. hall this afternoon and evening, and concluding with a boy's rally tomorrow morning at 9:30 o'clock. At noon today he addressed a goodly crowd of workmen at the Potter Printing Press Works Company.

At Y. M. C. A. hall last night Mr. Williams delivered a forcible address to an attentive audience, his theme being "The Undiscovered Country." His remarks were directed toward moral and intellectual persons as well as to the unconverted.

Taking St. Paul as an example of the "upright and moral man of the community," the speaker said: "No one in Plainfield can surpass St. Paul, the Isralite, of the tribe of Benjamin, ethically, as one of the best moral teachers and examples of his day, but with all his intellect and knowledge," Mr. Williams declared, "he was sitting absolutely in darkness, until he had seen and realized the light and saving power of Christ."

Continuing Mr. Williams said: "The most intellectual fellow can be a poor bum, down and out on the Bowery, unless he accepts Christ as did Paul of Tarsus. The undiscovered country pertains only to those who have not had their eyes opened."

Jesus Christ, in the opinion of the speaker, is the only one who can tell of the "undiscovered country." "Christ said," added Mr. Williams, "'I have come out of the bosom of my country.' The doctrine is simple and everybody should believe it, and forget the doctrines and beliefs of metaphysics and theologians who cast doubt on the question, as no scientists know this world and Christ does the other world.

"One wonders," added the speaker, "why God never sleeps. If everybody in this audience could see all that is going on in Plainfield they would not be able to sleep either. The trouble here is that there is chaos among the Christians and their lighs are not shining."

At this point of his talk Mr. Williams related an incident in his career a few years ago where 450 preachers and Christian workers attended a dinner, at two dollars a plate, in Boston. The object of that banquet, said Mr. Williams, was to discuss that important subject, "How to ameliorate the conditions of the poor."

"On my way to that dinner, I journeyed through the dark streets on that cold and stormy evening," said the speaker, "and beheld hundreds of thinly clad and hungry children and their mothers. I thought of the two dollar plate and at once I realized that I was in the real darkness.

"It was there that the message of the gospel should be spread. Jesus, Jerry McAuley, Crittenden and others went out into the darkness and performed their missions and Jesus wants us to do likewise. If we do not do it, you can rest assured that our lamps have gone out. Whenever a man begins to doubt his duty to Jesus Christ his lamp is surely going out."

EXPECT REINSTATEMENT FOR HENRY C. CORSA.

It was stated yesterday that a new movement would be started immediately for the reinstatement of Henry C. Corsa, of this city, who, when employed in the Federal Appraiser's department in New York, was unceremoniously dismissed after Wilbur F. Wakeman went out and George W. Whitehead went into office.

Mr. Wakeman, to whom Mr. Corsa told his story of bribery on the sugar docks, said yesterday that he would do all in his power to have Mr. Corsa put back. It was said that reinstatement would have to be made on an Executive order.

Donations to Hospital.

Pupils of the borough school were engaged in bringing their annual Thanksgiving gifts for Muhlenberg Hospital today. The donations consisted mainly of groceries and about two barrels were filled and turned over to the institution.

The North Plainfield High School Athletic Association has arranged to conduct a moving picture entertainment at Debele's Hall on the evening of December 4.

HARRY W. LEEK, DIES AFTER SHORT ILLNESS

Harry W. Leek, aged 39 years, who was taken suddenly ill on Election Day with a hemorrhage, while performing his duties as a member of the election board in the second district of the Second ward, died at his home, 311 East Fifth street, this morning. Since being taken ill on Election Day he failed gradually and did not respond to the best of medical treatment obtained.

Mr. Leek had been a resident of this city about fourteen years. He was the son of the late Caleb Leek and Mrs. Mary Dunster, his mother who survives, having married a second time. He was born at Morristown. Early in life he held clerical positions and was also engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Paterson. For eighteen years he was a butcher, at times being in business for himself and then working for others.

He was a member of Greenbrook Council, No. 1725, Royal Arcanum, of this city; Vannatta Council, No. 123, Jr. O. U. A. M., of Morristown, and was secretary of the Plainfield Democratic club. He is survived by a mother, a wife and one son. A brother, Walter Leek, lives in West Orange, and a sister, Mrs. U. Grant Pierson, resides at 311 East Fifth street, this city. He made his home here with his sister.

The funeral will be held from the late home Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

TROLLEY SQUABBLE IN DUNELLEN AGAIN

Dunellenites are filling their powder horns with ammunition for what appears to be another heated controversy with the Public Service Corporation. About five years ago the famous "loop war" created a lot of excitement and the present squabble gives evidence of equalling that in interest.

The first gun in the battle will be fired at the December meeting of the Common Council when the P. S. C. will present a petition asking for permission to remove the switch, which is now situated at Rock avenue, to some point between Washington avenue and Taylor's hotel in Dunellen.

Constable Robert L. Pierce, who is obtaining signatures of citizens who favor the project for the P. S. C. is evidently meeting with success, as up to yesterday he had secured about 150 names to the petition.

The main opposition to the plans of the P. S. C. appears to rest with the business men and merchants of North avenue, who claim that a switch in the business section, would tend to block the thoroughfare; and it is reported that they are also preparing a petition against the scheme, which will also be presented to the Council.

One business man, however, who is in favor of having the switch removed to a central point in the borough is Alvah A. Gray. He has stated that he is willing to permit the P. S. C. to establish it in front of his office on North avenue, which is a little east of Washington avenue.

While the merchants are prepared to offer a stiff opposition, it is the general opinion that the Borough Council will grant the request of the trolley company as it is admitted that traveling conditions between the borough and this city would be greatly improved. Under present condition there is generally a five-minute delay on every trip owing to the cars going west reaching the Rock avenue switch ahead of the cars going east.

Plan Past Chancellors' Night.

Unity Lodge, No. 102, K. of P., last night initiated one candidate. The committee on past chancellors' night reported all in readiness for a smoker and entertainment on Thursday night, December 2. A large turn out is expected.

Big School Game Tomorrow.

The city and borough football elevens will clash in their annual battle tomorrow afternoon. The game will be played on the old cricket grounds on Giraud avenue and will start at 1:45 o'clock.

An expensive Election.

The greatest amount ever paid for a fall election in this State was that approved by the auditing committee of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders yesterday, $7,985.33.

Will Have Time to Sober Up.

HE TALKS ON HOLLAND

Rev. Dr. William H. Morgan Lectures on "A Yankee in Dutchland."

HE GIVES HIS IMPRESSIONS.

Minister Describes the Beauties of the Country and Its Honest and Cleanly Folk.

The second of the series of splendid lectures under the auspices of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, was given at that church, last night, by Rev. Dr. W. H. Morgan, pastor of the Central M. E. church, Newark. His subject was "A Yankee in Dutchland." He was introduced by the pastor, Rev. C. S. Kemble.

The lecture was a descriptive exposition of a ten days' trip through Holland and the Netherlands. In it Dr. Morgan gave his impressions of Holland from books he had read and from observations taken in his travels. The speaker possesses a rare personal charm, which held the close attention of his audience throughout.

Dr. Morgan dwelt particularly on the solidity, the industry, thriftiness, cleanliness, the unchanging characters of the people, in regard to dress, styles and customs; the courageous and valiant battles in the great reclaiming projects for which the Hollander is noted throughout the civilized world; their unswerving patriotism to their country; the wealth of art treasures in pictures and paintings and portraits by Rembrandts, Rubens and VanDycks, those famous Dutch masters, whose pictures are prized and valued highly.

The lecturer said that the art galleries of the world are not complete without one or more of their paintings in them. He took his audience through Antwerp, The Hague, New Amsterdam, Leighton and Brussels, relating interesting facts concerning each place.

In concluding, Dr. Morgan laid stress on the fact that the United States owed the Dutch nation a debt of gratitude impossible to repay. The speaker claimed that America copied the first public system, the Supreme Courts and the great irrigation and reclamation projects from Holland.

After the lecture, Dr. Morgan held an informal reception with a number of friends and was congratulated for his excellent lecture. Rev. Dr. George C. Wilding, a well-known preacher and humorist, will deliver the third and final lecture in the series on Thursday night, December 16, the subject being "Riding the Virginia Circuit."

Sold Junk They Found.

William Chamberlain, Joseph Miles and John Murphy, all West End boys, were arraigned this morning before City Judge Runyon, on complaint of Samuel Berkowitz, of West Third street, on a charge of having stolen some hose and other junk from his barn. The junk was sold to Frank Pin, of Spooner avenue, so it was said, for a small sum of money. The boys claimed they found the stuff. They were allowed to go with a suspended sentence.

New Yorker Buys Summer Home.

George Beebe, a New York business man, has purchased the A. D. Cook farm on Park avenue, near Oak Tree, comprising about thirty-five acres, and intends changing it into a summer home. It adjoins the Woodruff farm. The consideration is said to be $8,000. Matthew J. Giles, who recently removed to Clinton avenue and West Eighth street, occupied the farm for twenty-two years.

—Special attention is called to the varied and large display of fancy fruits and the choice vegetables at Neuman Brothers. The firm prides itself on the choice assortment. Prices are reasonable.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS' HEAD

George E. Hall Re-elected President of State Association.

THE CONVENTION HAS CLOSED.

There Were Eight Hundred and Fifty Delegates Present at Annual Meeting at East Orange.

George E. Hall, of this city, was re-elected president of the State Sunday-school Association at its session in the Munn Avenue Presbyterian church, yesterday. Evidence of the fact that the Sunday schools of the State are very much alive was given when Edward W. Dunham, of Trenton, treasurer of the organization, in twelve minutes yesterday raised a budget of $7,735. Of this amount Mercer county pledged $500, the largest sum the county has ever contributed.

Treasurer Dunham made a plea for a five-cent appropriation from each member of the Sunday-schools and stated that if this plan was carried out there would be raised a sum amounting to $17,000. He also stated that eighteen counties of the State have received silk flags during the year for paying their appropriations in full, and that this is six more than ever before. He reported a balance of $31.68 and remarked that it is the first time in the history of the organization that a balance existed.

There were 725 delegates in attendance yesterday. This number is the largest in the history of the association and by noon today it was reported that 850 were in attendance. During the past year the membership has increased over 700 and while some schools in remote districts have gone out of existence, the schools in large cities have offset the loss.

Rev. E. Morris Fergusson, general secretary, tendered his resignation that he might take up a branch of work with the Presbyterian Board of Publication in Philadelphia. No successor has been chosen as yet. The superintendents' Union held its banquet last night, when Edward W. Dunham was re-elected president.

SHE SPEAKS AGAINST THE LICENSE SYSTEM

Mrs. S. B. Parsells, a W. C. T. U. worker from Philadelphia, visited this city yesterday under the auspices of the local union, and appeared at a parlor meeting in the afternoon at the home of the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. C. M. Anderson, and at the Seventh Day Baptist church in the evening.

The afternoon session was attended largely by members of the Plainfield union who enjoyed a pleasing talk by Mrs. Parsells, who reviewed in general the progress of the temperance work being conducted by the organization.

In the evening Mrs. Parsells was greeted by an interested audience at the church. For nearly an hour she dwelt on the liquor problem in which she deplored the evils of the present license system. Mrs. Parsell's topic was "Victory draws near."

MERCHANT OF VENICE THEME OF LECTURER

"The Merchant of Venice," was the title of the lecture delivered at Mount St. Mary's College, yesterday, by Dr. William Callan, of New York city, in the presence of the faculty, students and many prominent women of Plainfield, Westfield and Elizabeth.

The able manner in which Dr. Callan handled his subject, his clear enunciation and perfect portrayal of the several characters of the play, made it at once interesting and instructive. The hearty appreciation manifested by his audience makes it reasonable to consider that Dr. Callan will be cordially welcomed on the occasion of his next lecture, which is set for December 9. The theme will be "Psychology," and will precede the third lecture on "Hamlet."

Lost His Bearings.

Merritt Albin, of Sag Harbor, L. I., was overcome with too free an indulgence in apple jack yesterday, and because he was a stranger to Jersey's fatal drink and far from home he was allowed to go on a suspended sentence this morning by City Judge Runyon.

—George R. Nolen, of East Third street, who is at the hospital under treatment for concussion of the brain, does not show any signs of improvement.

PLAINFIELD'S PATROLMEN HAVE A JOLLY TIME AT THEIR FIRST ANNUAL BANQUET AND BALL

Last night will long be remembered as the night of the first annual ball of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association for many reasons. First, because it was the largest dance ever held in this city and because it was one of the most successful from a financial viewpoint. City officials from Mayor Charles J. Fisk, down were on hand to make the occasion an enjoyable one. Speeches by the Mayor and the visiting police chiefs were heard at the banquet which took place in a private room while the dance was in progress and it is safe to say that more was done to cement the friendship between the chiefs and their men than anything else in the nine years of the existence of the association.

The dance and banquet were held at Truell Hall where everything necessary for the comfort of the guests was provided by a thoughtful committee. Mayor Fisk, who was toastmaster, made a few introductory remarks in which the personnel of the force in this city was praised and he took pride in calling himself one of those who were responsible for the efficiency of the men. He said the quiet work of the men is the work which pleases and their high plane of effectiveness is something the city is proud of. Speeches were made by James Beggans and Chief Monihan, of Jersey City, two of the most influential men in the organization, the latter being its founder. Chief Monihan's speech brought out the fact that the heads of the departments are not all in the organization, but that they might better be and he urged the chiefs present and those who were of the rank and file to join the association because of its magnificent scope from a purely benevolent point of view, to say nothing of the better results which may be obtained from a closer fraternal relationship.

Henry Weller, of Newark, one of the organizers and the man who has done so much to make the association a success, spoke as did Chief P. S. Kiely, of this city. The speech of the evening came from the lips of Judge William Runyon, city magistrate. Judge Runyon's was an earnest and carefully prepared discourse upon the subject of Police Protection. It was masterly and to the point, giving the policeman a position in the community which many had not previously vouchsafed him. He said there were no better men in the world, no matter what their vocation. Other speeches, all of them complimentary to the association, were made by C. R. White, of East Orange; William G. Messler, president of the local association, and others.

The success of the entire event was due to the efforts of Patrolmen Messler and McDonald. They have worked hard in the interest of the organization and deserve all the praise bestowed upon them in the speeches. The great crowd which more than filled the hall pronounced the affair the best ever. Two hundred couples enjoyed the dance. During the evening Harry MacDonough, the famous tenor, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., rendered some splendid songs and the Dixie quartet, famous for their negro melodies, also contributed to the pleasure. The music by La Vere's orchestra in itself was an entertainment worth attending. The dance broke up at an early hour this morning with three hearty cheers for the men and their association.

The table decorations in the banqueting room were green and red with handsome candelabra. Each guest wore a white chrysanthemum while red and white roses were provided for others. There was nothing left undone that would in any way contribute to the pleasure of the people present. Among the guests at the banquet were: Mayor Charles J. Fisk, Judge William N. Runyon, Chief of Police P. S. Kiely, Chief Monihan, of Jersey City; Chief O'Neill, of Westfield; Chief Thadreus Doane, of the fire department; County Registrar Frank H. Smith, William R. Townsend, W. F. Arnold, Councilmen George W. Clay, Charles C. Randolph, William S. Gloak and D. W. Taylor; Julius J. Stahl, of North Plainfield; James Beggans, State President of the P. B. A.; John O'Brien, of Elizabeth; C. R. White, of East Orange; William H. Goodwin, of Trenton; H. B. Weller, of Newark; Patrolmen William G. Messler, president of the local association, and Daniel J. McDonald.

REV. GEORGE F. GREENE HAS ACCEPTED CALL

The trustees of the First Presbyterian church, Cranford, have extended an invitation to Rev. Gordon M. Russell, of Oyster Bay, N. Y., to become assistant to the Rev. George F. Greene, and he has accepted. Besides being an assistant at the Cranford church, he will also have charge of the Garwood chapel, the position made vacant through the death of the late Rev. Edward Love, of this city.

Mr. Love started this work at Garwood and was instrumental in securing the erection of a handsome chapel there. Mr. Russell comes to Cranford well recommended as a theologian. His father, Rev. Alexander G. Russell, has for many years been pastor of the First Presbyterian church, at Oyster Bay. He is a native of Oyster Bay and received his early education in private schools, later entered Princeton University, graduating in 1901; teaching for four years after graduation from college.

In 1905 he entered the Theological Seminary at Princeton, graduating in 1905. He was a Fellow in apologetics for 1908-09, studying in Berlin and has just recently returned from his European trip. It is not known just when he will enter upon his new duties.

FRIENDS DISCUSS WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE

The half year's meeting of the Religious Society of Friends closed this morning after a meeting for ministry and counsel and a brief meeting for worship. Inasmuch as the philanthropic committee had been disappointed in not securing a paper from Elizabeth Powell Bond, former dean of Swarthmore College, the attention of the meeting was rather by accident turned to the subject of woman suffrage. Phebe Wright explained the English point of view, and Anna Rice Powell deplored their belligerent attitude.

Last night Henry Wilbur occupied the time with a very interesting lecture with lantern views on his recent trip among the Quarkers and Quarker strongholds of England. The meeting as a whole was profitable and uplifting.

Phesenden S. Stites.

Phesenden S. Stites, a lifelong resident of Mt. Bethel, died yesterday morning as a result of a stroke of paralysis, aged 79 years. He is survived by three daughters and a brother. Mr. Stites died on the same farm on which he was born and raised. Funeral services will be conducted at the Mt. Bethel church Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

IT SUSTAINS MR. REED

Argument by Which Hudson Water Co. Fight Was Won, is Not Original.

FIRST HEARD IN LOCAL CASE.

Years Ago Senator Reed Scored Legal Victory When He Advanced Novel Reasoning in Water Case.

The recent decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals in the suit brought in the name of Samuel W. Meeker, but in which the city of Orange was the real party in interest, to restrain the Hudson Water Company from abstracting sub-surface water from the Meeker farm to supply a water system for Staten Island, is of peculiar interest to Plainfielders because the principle of law upon which this decision is based was asserted for the first time in this State in a Plainfield case. Many people will remember the suits brought a few years ago and tried first in the Somerset courts and subsequently in the Supreme Court, by the late P. M. French, Charles Hyde, Harper Hollinsworth & Darby, of Fanwood, and other owners of mills on Greenbrook, against the Summit Water Company for gathering by means of wells upon land owned by the Water Company, and supplying to the city of Summit, percolating or underground water which would in the course of nature have reached Greenbrook and assisted in turning the machinery of these mills.

The mill owners were represented by former Senator Charles A. Reed and the water company by Riker & Riker, R. V. Lindaberry and Frank Bergen, and the suits, because of the novel principle asserted, attracted wide attention at the time.

When Senator Reed first insisted that the water company was liable in damages for selling underground water taken from wells upon its own land, his contention was generally received with surprise and even ridicule. But when, contrary to all precedent, he won his case first in the county court and then in the Supreme Court, to which the water company appealed, the latter became alarmed and rather than risk a far reaching adverse decision by the Court of Errors and Appeals, the highest tribunal of the State, settled with the mill owners. The recent Meeker suit was conceived and fought out along the lines of the Greenbrook mill owners suits, and being carried to the Court of Errors and Appeals brought the principle contended for in the Greenbrook suits squarely before New Jersey's court of last resort for the first time. The result is that water companies will not be permitted to abstract by means of wells upon their own lands the percolating waters, where the effect will be to draw into their wells the aters from the lands of their neighbors or to reduce the natural flow of streams, unless by consent of those who are injured or by condemnation proceedings and proper compensation for the injury done.

CHARITY ORGANIZATION THANKSGIVING APPEAL.

The relief committee of the Charity Organization Society earnestly requests pecuniary or other assistance in giving out Thanksgiving dinners to the poor. Last year the society supplied 109 dinners and hopes that this year it will receive sufficient help to supply dinners to the most needy persons.

In view of the many Christian charities for children, the committee has decided to concentrate more effort on good cheer for the poor at Thanksgiving and less at Christmas and for this reason asks for increased help and interest from the supporters of the organization. Contributions may be sent as early as possible to the rooms of the society, 544 West Front street, telephone No. 103. Second-hand clothing is also solicited.

Good Lighting an Aid to Business

Money spent judiciously for the lighting of one's place of business by gas or electricity is as much an investment as an expense.

This is because light can be made to do more than give illumination; it can be utilized as a profit-producing advertisement.

Take two stores, side by side, one brilliant and cheerful in appearance; the other dim and cheerless. Which would be likely to get the more trade? Which would attract you?

And proper lighting does not necessarily mean large bills. Rather, it means having lamps and fixtures of a suitable character properly installed.

Is your installation all it should be? A few minor changes might net beneficient results. Our experts are ready to assist you without charge if you ask for their services.

We want you to be satisfied.

At the Greenwich Country Club on Thanksgiving Day two prizes will be played for presented by H. G. Sillick, Jr. The competition will be a class A and B event against Col. Bogey, under the club handicaps.

DRAGGED TO DEATH UNDER TROLLEY CAR.

While returning to his home from Newark, Charles Wilbur Wade, a young carpenter, of Elizabeth, was run down at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday night by a Newark-Elizabeth trolley car and instantly killed. His skull was crushed like an eggshell and his body frightfully mangled. It was dragged nearly half a block before the car stopped.

It was half an hour later before the dead man was extricated as jacks had to be procured to raise the car. The victim was taken to Engel's morgue. The accident happened at East Jersey street and the new direct road in Elizabeth.

Wade got off the rear platform of the car and went around its end in order to reach his home, 447 New Point road.

At that moment another trolley car bound for Newark came rushing along. The motorman of the car was William F. Tevlan, of Elizabeth, while the conductor was Solomon Eteiman, of Newark.

Both men were arrested at 11:15 o'clock by Police Captain Peters at the company's car barns, and taken to police headquarters. The accident caused much excitement on the car and a couple of women fainted from the shock. Wade was a native of Elizabeth, twenty-seven years old and single.

He was a powerfully built young man and resided with his parents, Charles F. and Emma Wade.

His mother was completely prostrated by the tragic event and her grief was heart rending. Wade belonged to the Carpenter's Union, also to Opechee Tribe No. 92, Improved Order of Red Men, and the Haymakers' Association, a branch of the Red Men. He was a communicant of Christ Episcopal church, where he was baptised.

The funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon. County Physician Westcott, of Fanwood, was notified and is making an investigation.

Boys Admit Theft of Brass.

Paterson, Nov. 19.—Four boys were arraigned before Recorder Carroll in police court yesterday morning charged with stealing brass valued at $100. The complaint was made by William Dunkerly, of Haledon. The youths said they were James Mossen, aged eleven, 92 Spruce street; Frank Berhing, aged thirteen, of 49 Morris street; Charles Thompson, aged ten years, of 151 Oliver street, and William Kronk, aged thirteen, of 49 Pine street. The boys admitted their guilt and said they sold the brass to a junkman for fifty cents. It is believed by the police these are the boys who pulled a gas mete from its fastening in the cellar of 79 Jersey street one day last week, and after touching a lighted match to the escaping gas, turned in a fire alarm.

Cut by Fall Through Window.

William Jackson, twelve years old, fell through the window of a five and ten cent store in Elizabeth, Wednesday afternoon and was severely cut about the head and face. He was taken to Dr. Sheriff's office and from there to the Elizabeth Hospital, where his injuries were dressed. He was able afterwards to go home.

FLEMINGTON SAUSAGE—GOOD AS EVER.

HOME DEP'T WORK DISCUSSED BY THEM

Under the auspices of the recently-organized home department of Warren chapel Sunday-school, a social gathering was held at the chapel, last night, for the members and a few invited friends. The department now has a membership of about forty-five, with ten visitors.

The program last night was in charge of Joseph W. Gavett, superintendent of the Sunday-school. During the evening he introduced F. E. Smith, superintendent of the Trinity Reformed church Sunday school, who gave a helpful and interesting talk on home department work, showing what a benefit it had been not only to his church, but others in the community.

An excellent musical program was rendered to the enjoyment of all. The first number was a vocal solo by Miss Florence Straubel, who sang "Anchored," accompanied by her father on the piano. This was followed with a mandolin and guitar duet by Miss Straubel and Theodore Lupser, and then a 'cello solo by Miss Straubel. The concluding number was a vocal solo by Master Ernest Starubel, aged ten years. Mr. Straubel was the accompanist for the evening.

After the entertainment an adjournment was taken to the parlors, where games were played, a social time enjoyed and refreshments were served. There were about fifty persons present.

DOG BIT HIM IN FACE; PEDDLER SUES FOR $150.

Max Morris, a peddler of this city, has instituted a suit, in tort, for $50 damages, against Joseph Passaski, of New Market, the papers of which are returnable before Jusitce Clark T. Rogers, at the latter place, on Wednesday, November 24. Constable Robert L. Pierce served the summons on Passaski yesterday.

The suit is the result of Passaski's dog biting Morris in the face as the latter entered Passaski's yard one day last week. According to Passaski's side of the story, the dog attacked Morris, while the latter was trying to open a cellar door. The latter, it is understood, claims that the dog sprung at him as he entered Passaski's yard while trying to sell green merchandise.

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

The communion class of the Sacred Heart church here will receive their first communion on next Sunday. The ceremony will be in charge of the Rev. J. Baldwin, pastor.

The Plainfield Auto-Bus line which has been out of commission for a couple of days, resumed its schedule last night.

A bad wreck on the Lehigh Valley Railroad lines at Park View yesterday morning, delayed traffic for about half a day.

All are urged especially to attend tonight's meeting of the Middlesex Volunteer Fire Co.

William Hamilton is now able to be around again after a short illness.

The meeting of the P. O. S. of A. was held last night in Washington hall.

EAST END CHURCH MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT

The first musical entertainment under the auspices of the Netherwood Reformed church, was given in the church last night and was a decided success. A large audience gathered, every seat in the edifice being taken. The program was an excellent one throughout.

Vocal solos were rendered by Miss S. Etta Raybert, the soprano soloist of Trinity Reformed church, and James T. Veneklasen, of the New Brunswick Seminary. Two numbers were rendered by a mixed quartet, composed of Samuel O. Rush, Miss Maude Berry, James T. Veneklasen and A. H. Stevenson. Mrs. Una Searles recited several selections, following the piano solos by Mrs. Samuel O. Rush. Miss Raybert was accompanied in her singing by Miss Lillian A. Force on the piano.

That the entertainment was a success, was proven by the generous applause of the audience and every number was encored. The concert is one of several such forms of entertainment to establish the church on a firm social and religious standing in the community.

After the entertainment, refreshments were served to those who had taken part in the entertainment and a social time was enjoyed. The concert was of unusual interest, in that it was the first attempt to give such a high-class affair in that community, which is becoming more and more a social and religious centre and shows that the Netherwood Reformed church is filling a long-felt want.

DUNELLEN OFFICIALS TAKE OATH OF OFFICE.

Successful candidates at the recent election at Dunellen were sworn in at a special meeting of the Common Council of that place last night. They included Mayor-elect William A. Sanford, Councilmen Robert F. Bogardus and Charles E. Richards, Assessor J. H. L. Peters and Tax Collector Isaac Stites. The newly elected officials were administered the oath of office by Borough Clerk Abner S. Coriell, Jr.

The Council also settled the controversy with the New York Telephone Company by adopting a resolution which gives permission to the corporation to attach its wires to poles belonging to the P. S. C. Such being the arrangement the company were obliged to erect only two poles.

Runyon Bible Class Program.

William D. Murray will deliver an address to the members of the William N. Runyon Bible Class at Hope chapel on Tuesday night. Mr. Murray will describe his recent visit to Oxford University in England. There will also be musical features and refreshments will be served. On Tuesday night, December 28, H. C. Condict will give an address on "Handling Freight in the United States."

"The tree grows as the twig is bent." "The child is the father of the man." If you want your boy to be happy and wealthy in manhood, train him for it now. Get him a pass book from this bank and he will soon learn the value of a bank account. The money he will save by the time he is twenty-one will be valuable to him but the habit of economy and knowledge of banking will be of even greater benefit. — BANK NOTES.

SOME STATE NEWS BRIEFS

Kenneth, the small son of John Chard, Millville, was severely injured in a fall down the cellar Wednesday.

Woodmen of the World, of Trenton, will have a class initiation Tuesday evening, November 23. Some 300 applicants for membership will receive the degree.

From blood poisoning, developing from an injury from a rusty nail, Arthur Foreman, thirty-three years old, of Marlton, died in Cooper Hospital, Camden, Wednesday.

Arrested in Camden as a deserter, William Brown, nineteen years old, was taken back to the Philadelphia Navy Yard at League Island by Policeman Golden Wednesday.

After several hours of intense suffering Abram Handel, thirteen years old, of 807 Kaighn avenue, Camden, who was burned all over the body late Tuesday night, died at Cooper Hospital Wednesday.

Mrs. Mary Wheyman, of 203 Mulberry street, Trenton, had a narrow escape from being killed Wednesday afternoon, when she attempted to board a trolley car and was dragged along Perry street.

Accused of kicking and internally injuring his sister, Frank Trusty, one of Camden's dogcatchers, was committed to jail from the police court Wednesday to await the result of her injuries. She is under the care of a physician.

The jail is yawning for some 500 delinquent taxpayers of Woodbury, and unless settlement is made at once they will be locked up, according to a notice by Councilman Coombs, which passed unanimously at Tuesday night's meeting.

Headed by Mayor Hampton, all the policemen of Bridgeton are making efforts to round up William Smith, who smashed his way out of the lock-up and put the city in turmoil. Smith had been locked up as an ordinary "drunk."

Lewis G. Myers, a well known and wealthy resident of Gloucester, was stricken with paralysis while on his way to bank with money paid as dues of a building association, of which he is treasurer, Tuesday night. Dr. Bennett says the case is serious.

Procuring a copy of the oath of office taken by Councilman-elect Old in Camden yesterday, Harry C. Kramer, a lawyer, said he expected to bring quo warranto proceedings to test the right of Mr. Old to take his seat. It is claimed that he is not naturalized.

For the second time within a few days George Kirk, colored, was accused in the Camden Police court Wednesday of assaulting little girls. The latest complainant is Catharine Smith, of 611 Sagamore street, who alleged that he assaulted her fifteen-year-old daughter. Kirk is in jail.

Blasting was resumed Wednesday in the Erie Railroad's cut in Jersey City Heights under the scrutiny of six policemen, who are to report accidents and the lack of carefulness. The blasting was stopped on Tuesday by the prosecutor's detectives, who arrested officials in charge of the blasting and several workmen.

WILL CELEBRATE BATTLE OF TRENTON.

Trenton, Nov. 19.—With an appropriate program the Battle of Trenton is to be celebrated by the Princes of Caliphs here Sunday, December 27. The program includes exercises in the Taylor Opera House Sunday evening and a general celebration and banquet on Monday.

A committee of more than 100 was named Wednesday night to arrange details in connection with the celebration, and it is proposed to secure for the opera house exercises speakers of national reputation. Winkler's Second Regiment Band will furnish the music for the double event, both at the exercises and at the banquet.

The Princes of Caliphs propose to make the celebration of this historical event an annual affair. The interior of the opera house will be decorated for the event. Marvin A. Riley is general chairman of the committee of arrangements. The general committee will meet Monday.

SAYS SOMERSET CO. DELAYS U. S. MAILS.

For the first time in its history Somerset county is charged by the Federal government with interfering with mails. The complaint is made on information of a rural delivery carrier, who charges the county with removing the bridge over the North Branch River near Pluckemin. The carrier complains that he is obliged to go three miles out of his way, delaying the mails.

County Engineer Joshua Doughty, Jr., claims that the carrier has overlooked an easy crossing near the site of the bridge, and he and Postmaster John G. Gaston, of Somerville, went there yesterday and established a direct route for the carrier.

The county is building a new bridge on the site of the former structure.

All-Star Bill at Proctor's. Undoubtedly one of the best vaudeville shows yet offered at Proctor's theatre, was presented last night. Every act is a headliner and should attract capacity audiences the rest of the week. The Circle of Death, the Kiltie Du, The Great Du-Bois & Co., and the Emperor's Gunner, are stellar attractions that should be seen to be appreciated.

I'd Like to See the Liver of a Fat Man

This is the expression of a medical man who said that the liver of a fat man must present a wonderful sight when that man is alive and performing his regular duties. The liver is the largest organ in the human body. The stomach calls on the liver and so does the blood. If the liver gives to the digestive apparatus improper juices then the digestion is wrong. This is what makes people fat. The liver is not right. On popular demand we have made the famous Marmola Prescription into Tablets which are eaten after meals just like food and they digest that food as it should be digested. They remove fat already accumulated at the rate of from 12 to 15 ounces per day and leave no wrinkles or flabby skin. Carry one in your vest pocket or purse when you dine out and eat what you will. Fasting, diet and exercise will not reduce fat. You only starve the body and by tearing down other organs you bring the fat with the rest of the destruction. Marmola tablets are sold by all druggists and in greater quantity than all the other so-called fat reducers combined. There must be merit in them or their sale could not be growing larger every month. Ask any druggist or if you prefer send 75 cents to The Marmola Company, Dept. 988, Detroit, Mich., and they will send you a large case of Marmola Tablets in plain package by mail.

WOULD-BE BAD MEN HALTED AT CLYDE.

The dreams of four boys of New Brunswick to scalp Indians and to become bad men out West came to an end near Clyde last night, when they were arrested by Special Officer Rozolinsky. The boys had stolen a carriage from Michael Anderson, a farmer, while he was being shaved.

When arrested the boys had three revolvers and had rigged up a tent with bits of canvass one of them had taken from his home. In the tent they had stowed away a single loaf of bread. They were taken to New Brunswick and locked up. They gave their names as Michael Fernelli, 13 years old; William Finnegan, Fred Rosenberg and Russell Holman, 7 years old each.

According to the story told by the three youngest boys the trip West was planned by Fernelli. They were to have continued their journey this morning.

Ward Bird, of Fairview avenue, is detained at home by illness.

Thomas A. Neely, of Pittsburg, is visiting at the home of friends in the borough.

Clarence Hand, of Fairview avenue, has returned home after spending a week touring New York State.

REPUBLICAN PLURALITY IN STATE WAS 41,502

Trenton, Nov. 19.—Complete election returns, as compiled in the office of the Secretary of State, show that on the Assembly vote, on November 2, the Republicans carried the State by a plurality of 41,502. The total Republican vote on the Assembly ticket, excepting Ocean county, was 210,659, and the Democratic vote, 169,157. In Ocean county there was no Democratic Assembly candidate against Benjamin H. Crosby and for the purposes of the comparisons above made, the vote for Senator was taken as a basis.

As compared with the Presidential vote of 1908, the Democrats at the last election polled eighty-eight per cent. of the vote of 1906 and the Republicans eighty-three per cent., the total vote being 85.5 per cent. of that cast a year ago.

In the appended table there is shown the total vote cast in each county for the Republican and Democratic Assembly tickets, and also the majorities in each county as between the Republican and Democratic tickets. In the latter computation the minor tickets are not included.

N. Y. AMUSEMENTS.

"A Trip to Japan," "The Ballet of Jewels" and "Inside the Earth," the New York Hippodrome's three big spectacles continue their prosperous course in what has proved thus far to be the record season of the big playhouse. "The Ballet of Jewels" with its gorgeously clad coryphees, the Maori Village introducing an entire tribe of wild New Zealanders in thrilling native dances, the Wonderful Waterfall of Living Women, the panorama of New York harbor at night, the feast of ten thousand lanterns and the startling finale when an army of men and women marches into the water disappearing entirely from view; these are a few of the sensational features of this season's sumptuous show. Twice daily the New York Hippoodrome is filled by enthusiastic crowds of patrons which is the real test of the popularity of the present series of scenic spectacles.

More Pay for Cigar Makers.

Now that the girl cigar makers have returned to work, unsuccessful in their strike for higher wages, Hirschhorn, Mack & Co., of New Brunswick, have announced an increase in pay for all departments. The raise averages from seven to fifteen per cent. A member of the firm said such a raise had been contemplated before the strike began, but when the girls refused to work and resorted to violence it was determined by the management not to yield.

Inland Waterway Movement.

Atlantic City, Nov. 19.—A movement for digging the State inland waterway in this county was started Wednesday with the arrival of State Engineers Logan and Sherman, who are under orders to make surveys of the waterway route between May Marsh and Oyster Thoroughfare, now too shallow for boat travel. Contracts for the work will be awarded as soon as the survey work of the experts is completed.

Coin Collection Stolen.

Jersey City, Nov. 19.—W. H. Glass, of 97 Belmont avenue, lost 4,000 old coins valued at about $200 Wednesday. They were stolen from his home by some one who forced an entrance by breaking a rear window. Some of the coins were gold. A neighbor of Glass' found an empty tin box in his yard, and this led to the discovery of the theft. The coins represented years of collection.

REV. T. MOORE-SMITH IN A NEW CHARGE

Rev. T. Moore Smith, formerly pastor of the Baptist church, Scotch Plains, has accepted the call to the pastorate of a Reformed church between Spring Valley and Suffern, N. Y., and left yesterday for that place. The church of which he is to be in charge has a large membership and is in the centre of a prosperous section of the country.

Mr. Smith severed his connection with the Scotch Plains church because of a disagreement between himself and members of the church over a number of prize-winning dogs owned by the parson. The parishioners felt that the minister was devoting too much time to his dogs to the neglect of his pastoral work.

Since that time Mr. Smith has supplied various churches and has also acted as a judge at the big bench shows held throughout the country. He has now decided to return to the ministry. He preached for the church in New York State last summer and made a favorable impression.

Committee on Social Service.

Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, rector of Grace P. E. church is a member of the committee on social service which was appointed at the last convention of the diocese of New Jersey. LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

A well known critic has said that "Lyman H. Howe's Festival of Travel inspires thought and conversation for weeks and weeks to come." It is more enjoyable than actual travel for there is no bad weather, fear of accidents or other disappointments to mar the pleasure of "Howe's Tourists." Those who will "Travel with Lyman H. Howe" this afternoon and tonight at the Plainfield theatre will see a new conquest of the world in perfect photography.

Miss Elsie Ferguson, who created a veritable sensation in New York by jumping to the position of star in "Such a Little Queen," in less than a week, comes to the Plainfield theatre in this play Monday evening. Henry B. Harris has surrounded Miss Ferguson with one of the most notable dramatic organizations ever seen here, including Frank Gilmore, Ralph Stuart, Francis Byrne, Eleanor Lawson, George W. Barnum, Louis Grisel, Stanley G. Wood, Marion Little, Jessie Ralph, A. W. Neuendorf, Kraft Walton, Arthur A. Klein, Gertrude Barrett, William Cahan and others equally well known here.

Colonel John Sneed's Conversations on Domestic Problems

Copyright, 1909, by G. S. Yost.

VII.—Some Points on Raising Girls

COLONEL SNEED'S son had come back to the old home for a visit and had brought with him his wife and little daughter, a busy, prattling youngster of three years, who pulled her grandfather's whiskers and stuck her chubby fingers into his eyes with impunity.

"Daughter," said the colonel one evening after the child had been put to bed and he had rearranged his toilet, "what do you contemplate doin' with that streak of sunshine?"

"Why, I'm going to take the best possible care of her," answered young Mrs. Sneed, "and try to make a good woman of her."

"You're not figurin' on makin' an actress or an artist or a stenographer out of her, are you?"

"No," laughed the daughter-in-law; "I haven't got that far along yet. But why do you ask?"

"Well, I didn't know. It seems like every woman's got to have a mission these days—one that's different from the original—and I thought maybe you'd laid out a brilliant career, with plenty of handclaps and bouquets in it. I'm mighty glad to know that makin' a good woman of her is all you've got in mind. Understand, I'm not sayin' she couldn't have what they call a career and be a good woman at the same time, but I've got a kind of an old fashioned notion that the finest thing on earth is a good wife and a good mother. That's a career that's higher than any man can aspire to, and the good woman who don't get up to that level has missed something in life.

"Anyhow, the makin' of a good woman is a big enough job for any mother to tackle. I've always had a belief that there was more care necessary in raisin' girls than in raisin' boys. It's a good deal the same difference as there is between a post oak saplin' and a rosebush. One can pretty nearly take care of itself, but it takes a lot of watchin' and a lot of trainin' to bring out all the bloomin' beauty of the other. When the Lord makes a woman he plants within her the seeds of some qualities that when they grow up and blossom form the main difference between her character and that of a man. We can't exactly define them, but we know that they're there, and we also know that women are more attractive, more lovely and more lovable in proportion to the development of those qualities within them. Sometimes the seed don't seem to have sprouted at all, and then the woman is pretty much the same as a man. Then, again, they spring up and grow like a moon vine, and every man, no matter how low down mean he is, steps to one side and takes off his hat.

"Put all these qualities together, add them up and you've got what we call womanliness. That's a mighty big word, and it takes in nearly all the virtues that we can understand as well as some we can recognize, but can't quite place. It means purity and goodness and sympathy and tenderness and modesty and—but it's no use tryin' to analyze it. We know what it means even if we don't know why we know it, and we're mighty sure it's worth all the time and trouble it takes to produce it, for it does take time and trouble. It's very seldom that womanliness grows wild. It's got to be developed by cultivation — what the high browed farmers at the state university call intensive cultivation—and the mother who makes good on the job has to know what's what.

A COMBINATION OF QUALITIES.

"Now, my dear, I'm just a man, and I've got no right to set myself up as a counselor for mothers, but sometimes it's worth while to know how a man looks at these things, even if he does make a kind of a fool of himself by mixin' in. I've got a notion, in the first place, that you can't begin trainin' a girl too soon. There isn't anything new about that idea, but it seems to me that what used to be the rule is gettin' to be the exception, and babies are left to grow up pretty much as they please, on the theory, I reckon, that it's no use to do anything until they get old enough to understand. Well, I've found out, and I guess you have, too, that babies begin to understand the minute they open their eyes, and the time to begin on the job of makin' a woman is the day she's born.

"And the first thing she ought to learn, my dear, is that her mother is the greatest and best woman on earth and that what she says to do must be done because it's right. Now, you can't make her believe that just by tellin' her so. Every baby, particularly every girl baby, has to be shown. You may fool her for awhile, but sooner or later she's goin' to get your true measure, and if it isn't up to the standard there'll be a loss of confidence, which is the first step toward failure in domestic affairs as well as in business. So it's up to you to make good, to be yourself what you want your daughter to be. That, I admit, is a pretty large order, for it's a whole lot easier to tell others what to do than to do it ourselves, and the hardest place to live up to a standard is the place where it's the most needed—at home. But all the same it's worth doin'.

"BABIES BEGIN TO UNDERSTAND."

"Another thing that she ought to find out pretty early is that her mother is not her slave. That's an impression it's mighty easy to fix and mighty hard to get rid of; also it's one that spoils more fine material for the makin' of good women than anything else I know of. It's natural for the mother to want to do everything she can for her child, and the child isn't to be blamed for lettin' her do it, but she mighty soon gets in the habit of dependin' on mother, and that means the development of selfishness and the loss of self reliance, either one of which cuts out all hope of makin' a womanly woman of her. Nothin' makes my blood boil harder than to see a girl sit in the parlor and bang the piano while her mother bends over the dishpan. And yet nine times out of ten it's the mother's fault. A girl, no matter what her station in life, should learn right at the start that she has somethin' to do in the world besides giggle and look pretty. She ought to be taught what to do and how to do and then, if necessary, made to do. But if you begin right and begin early you'll never have to force her, and when you get respect for mother as well as love firmly established in a girl's mind and heart you've gone a long ways in the makin' of a good woman, a womanly woman. The rest is easy.

BANGING THE PIANO.

"I reckon that's all tonight, my dear."

She Found Out.

"I thought I'd stop for a minute and inquire the price of tomatoes," she said to the grocer as she set down her basket.

"Yes'm—they are 3 cents apiece."

"Whist, but isn't that high?"

"It is. But we must have protection for the American raiser, you know."

"And how much for a washboard today?"

"Thirteen cents—reduced from 15."

"What makes that?"

"The tariff, ma'am."

"Oh, I see. And how much for taters, if you please?"

"They are up 30 cents a bushel."

"Whist again, but what makes that?"

"What they call ad valorem."

"Of course. And what's the price of flatirons, if not too much trouble?"

"They are down, cheaper than ever."

"And it's because"—

"That's free trade."

"Um; I see. Well, Patrick will be thankful to them great men in Washington when I tell him what you say."

"You understand it, do you?"

"As plain as day, sir. The price of flatirons and washboards has come down to give the poor a chance to live, and the price of tomatoes and taters has gone up to give the rich a squeeze, as should be the case. Thankee, sir, and good day to ye."—Pittsburg Press.

A Dreary Land.

The country from Jerusalem to the Jordan valley is as dreary and desolate as could be imagined. The hills look like great banks of rock and sand. Not even the Sahara itself looks more forbidding. It is the "country not inhabited," the wilderness into which the scapegoat was driven. We are all glad we went, but none of us could be induced to go again.—Zion's Herald.

"I will tell him," she said, rising. "I will warn him."

"Warn?"

"You think that this boy has inherited tendencies which you can appeal to. I'll appeal to Philip's better nature."

"Suppose you fail?"

"I cannot fail. I love him."

Haggleton sat down opposite her.

"Let me tell you something, Miss Lawrence," he said very quietly. "I am telling you because you are a woman—a good woman. But, Miss Lawrence"—he raised his voice skillfully to deepen her attention—"it is astonishing how much harm is done in this world by good women."

"What do you mean?" she asked.

"I will show you what I mean right in my own life. You think it has been all hard and cruel, no love in it at all. Just scheming for money, grabbing everything in sight. But who made me that way? A woman—a splendid, high principled woman like you."

"You mean your wife?"

"Yes, my wife," in a very low voice. "My wife," he continued, "did not approve of certain things I did in business, but instead of helping me she left me. She stole away my little boy, my son, and when she took him she took all the love out of my life. Four years old he was when—when she took him away. Such a brave little fellow! He had just had his curls cut off. He used to walk along with me and swing his little cane. Love him! Love him! What plans I made for that boy! What hopes I had for him! And when he got sick—well, never mind, but I love him! He was my son, my only son! You think that I have all I want because I have money. Money! I tell you I want my son, and you want to take him from me. I've got him, and I am going to keep him!"

Haggleton had more to say.

"Do you believe in fair play?" he asked. "Do you know why I did not tell him that I am his father? It is because Gentle said that it wasn't fair to throw my millions in the scale against his ideals."

"Gentle made you promise?"

"Yes. And I did not want to buy a son—I wanted to win his respect and love."

At this moment Gentle entered quietly. Margaret got up. The spell of Haggleton was broken.

"You have aroused Philip's admiration by your conduct of this business," she said with decision. "You can bend every one to your will, but you can't bend mine."

"Gentle," said Haggleton briefly, "I have kept my word. I have not told Philip."

"You knew that he is Philip's father?" asked the girl.

"Yes, Margaret. You believe me to be Philip's friend and yours?"

"Yes, but"—

"Don't tell Philip," repeated the old diver, with increasing seriousness. And he added significantly:

"At least not until I give the word."

"I trust you, Mr. Gentle," she said slowly. "I will not tell Philip."

Then, turning full upon Haggleton, she threw down the gauntlet between 'em:

"I have promised now, but—the battle is not ended yet."

"The battle!" answered Haggleton. "The battle!" he said again. "I accept your challenge, but you, who love him and whom he loves, remember that he is my son! We are of one flesh, he and I, and that's the elemental fact. You cannot keep us apart!"

He bowed to Margaret and left the room.

The girl at once turned to Gentle. The momentous interview through which she had just passed was forgotten in her anxiety for her lover.

The old diver could give her good news. He had been ordered not to go out with the tub, but to stay on the dock, and had hurried home the moment the news had been signaled across the water that all was well, to tell Margaret and put an end to her suspense. He had not found her there and had gone to Moran's place to look for her, stopping, however, long enough on the way to telephone for particulars if any were yet to be had. He had received them briefly in the laconic language used by all men who have a calling or a profession in common.

Gentle had heard enough to assure Margaret that Philip had made one of the bravest rescues on record, a deed that would be celebrated for many a day wherever divers met together. Calculating daring, a dangerous risk deliberately planned and carried through to the fraction of a minute, superhuman strength—these were the qualities that stood in the narrative unavoidably tangled up in many technicalities.

And Philip was not hurt? Margaret asked again and again. On being informed that he was safe and sound and hoped to see her that evening she hurried away to prepare for his coming.

Gentle, left alone, looked around the room, so cheery now in its neatness and order, yet it felt unaccountably empty.

"Jenny!" he called, but no answer came.

He put on his hat and slowly went out into the street.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE MASTER DIVER.

PHILIP had hastened to the scene of the accident. As they steamed along on the tug one of the men explained what had happened. A barge loaded with copper ore had been run into by a ferryboat early that morning and sunk in fifty feet of water off Eighteenth street.

Atkinson had gone down to put chains under the barge so they could get her up. Four times he had signaled them to lift, and four times they had tried and failed. He had been down over three hours!

Philip shuddered. "In fifty feet of water!" He knew that two hours at such a depth was a full day's work for the strongest diver with the brain throbbing under an air pressure of many tons.

"Come," he cried as they drew up to an ugly wrecking scow anchored in midstream—"come, get the suit on me quick!" Three of the crew worked swiftly and silently dressing him, for no diver can dress himself.

"Go into the cabin and fetch me my knife," Philip said to one of the men.

Slowly he lifted his heavy feet over the side and, standing on the ladder bent forward on the deck, face down, as a man would lay his neck on the block. The helpers made fast around his waist the hundred pound belt of lead that would presently sink him to the bottom, and under his arms they fixed the life line noose. Then they brought the copper helmet with its three goggle eyes and screwed it fast to the collar, leaving the face glass out for a last word.

"Old comrade, I'm here!"

"Here's your knife," said the helper, holding out a leathern sheath to Philip.

(To be Continued).

Why Don't You Economize on Coal?

The hungry furnace and the coal man are a hard combination to beat, but the

BOYNTON Square Fire-Pot

FURNACE

is the friend of the man who takes care of the fire. The square fire-pot prevents the clogging of clinkers around the sides of the fire. That means all fire—more heat per unit of space. The square pot gives a greater surface for combustion and heat radiation and actually takes less coal for a good fire. And then there's the Boynton special flue for carrying away the dust. You don't sift ashes all over the house when you shake down the BOYNTON.

Talk it over with the BOYNTON dealer in your town.

There are BOYNTON heating plants of all kinds. Ask about our Round or Sectional Boilers for Steam or Hot Water. Also Ranges.

MAKES RICH WEDDING CAKE

Recipe for Important Confection Has Been Handed Down Through Many Generations.

Here is a recipe that has passed down through so many generations that the family has lost trace of its origin:

Take one cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar, three cupfuls of flour, four eggs, three large spoonfuls of molasses, one teaspoonful of soda, two teaspoonfuls each of ground cloves and cassia, one nutmeg (grated) and one pound of raisins, one pound of currants and one pound of citron.

Cream the butter and sugar and add the molasses with the soda. Cut the seeded raisins in two or three pieces, but do not chop fine. Rub them in flour so that each piece will be separated. Also rub the currants in the flour. Do not use quite half a pound of citron, as it will make the cake too heavy, but slice it very thin. Beat the cake well before putting in the fruit. Heap the cups of flour a little. Use extra flour for the fruit. Line tins with buttered paper and bake in a moderate oven for two or three hours, according to the size of the loaves of cake you make. If they get too brown, and you are not using a gas oven so that you can turn off most of the heat, cover the cake with brown paper. Make the cake three or four weeks before you wish to use it if you want it moist and rich. The above quantity will give you one good-sized loaf or two small cakes.

FOR MILK BOTTLE

This neat little stopper not only makes it possible to seal the milk bottle after the pasteboard cover has been extracted, but it provides a prong with which to extract the pasteboard.

About Soup.

Soup should not contain fatty matter, but should contain all other meat properties. It takes longer to make soup if one sets the stock aside to cool before using the liquid. It is best to take a muslin cloth, wring it out of ice water and run the liquid through it. The fatty substance will cling to the cloth. If meaty particles boil through the soup, it clouds it. This is merely the boiled blood, and should be skimmed off as soon as it rises to the top. Should it get into the liquid, break an egg into the soup, stir it around and when it boils it will come to the top, bringing all substance with it. It quickly clears muddy looking soup.

Fried Green Corn.

Score the grains and cut from the cob, scrape out all corn milk. Brown enough butter in a porcelain pan to season the corn, place it in the pan with salt and pepper and fry until the corn milk is cooked into the corn, then add a very small amount of water, place the pan in a pan of boiling water. Cover the corn with a lid and steam until done. Before serving add a dash of flour, a spoonful of sugar and a cup of rich cream, or enough to moisten the corn, and boil. This is a very rich and appetizing dish, the flour when cooked thickens the juice to a creamy paste.

Dark Cake.

One egg, one cup sugar, one-half cup butter, one cup thick sour milk, one teaspoon soda (level), one teaspoon vanilla, one-half lemon, one-fourth teaspoon all kinds of spice, two cups sifted flour, one cup chopped raisins, one cup chopped walnuts.

Frosting—Two cups brown sugar, one-half cup cold water. Boil until it threads. Have ready beaten white of one egg; pour on syrup gradually, add vanilla and beat until cool. This cake is good with or without frosting.

Apple Butter.

Boil one barrel of new cider down half, peel and core three bushels of good cooking apples; when the cider has boiled to half the quantity, add the apples, and when soft, stir constantly from eight to ten hours. If done it will adhere to an inverted plate. Put away in stone jars (not earthenware), covering first with writing paper cut to fit the jar, and press down closely upon the apple butter; cover the whole with thick brown paper snugly tied down.

Tasty Hotpot.

One pound of shoulder of lamb or beef cut into two-inch squares, four potatoes sliced thin as for frying, one onion cut fine. In a deep dish place first a layer of meat, salt and pepper; over this drop one-half of the onion, then a layer of potatoes. Repeat, having a thick layer of potatoes on top to brown nicely. Bake three hours in a rather slow oven.

To Remove Can Cover

In case a screw top on a can sticks, strike the cover lightly with the handle of an old knife, if there is no tack hammer convenient, while you turn the can. In a few moments the most stubborn cover will open with simply a slight twist.

WHY I AM A CHRISTIAN

By REV. A. C. DIXON, D. D., Pastor of the Chicago Ave. (Moody's) Church, Chicago.

I am a Christian because I am a theist, and I am a theist because I am a thinker. Not necessarily a profound thinker, but my thinking machine is so constructed that if I will let it work it compels me to believe in a God who reigns in his world. A few weeks ago in an Arizona desert I saw the leaves of the grease-wood covered with an oily substance designed, evidently, to prevent evaporation of sap during the long drought. I saw the mesquite bush with its large, long roots evidently designed to store sap during the brief rainy season and keep in touch with the underground streams that the branches above ground might be supported during the drought. I saw the giant cactus with its storeroom for water, which is filled during the rainy season and preserved for its own use and the use of man and beast during the drought. Now the naturalist says that "Nature" does these things for a specific purpose. And as I stood among these evidences of design in the desert I asked the question: "Is Nature a thing or a thinker?" If Nature does not think, how can Nature design? And if Nature thinks, Nature is not a thing but a personality. My mental machinery is so made that thought compels me to infer a thinker and design a designer. Intelligent result compels me to infer intelligent cause.

Every man, therefore, has his god, the thinker, behind the thoughts expressed in Nature, the design behind the designer, the intelligent cause behind the intelligent result. The bushman of Africa gives to his fetich the power to think, design and act. The Chinaman gives to his idol in human shape the same attributes. A philosopher like Herbert Spencer calls his idol "the great unknowable."

I am a Christian, again, because I am a rationalist, willing that sound reason should be my guide, and sound reason is modest and honest enough to admit that it is not infallible or even sufficient as a guide. There is no such thing as universal reason. What appears reasonable to one is utterly unreasonable to another. There are degrees of reason from the half-idiot to the philosopher.

My own reason is modest enough to admit that it is a very fallible and imperfect guide, and, believing as I do in a personal God who cares for his creatures, my reason leads me to expect that he will reveal himself through some other channel. Agnosticism, which is a sort of science of ignorance concerning God, is a strong witness in favor of a revelation of God in some direct way, for, if it be true that man cannot discover God by looking into his own inner consciousness or through the telescope and the microscope, this furnishes a strong presumption that he will reveal himself in some other way. I am thus prepared to receive the revelation of God in a book, and, though there are difficulties and mysteries which I may not fully understand, I believe that the proof in favor of the Bible's being a revelation from God is so overwhelming that a man who knows the proof cannot reject it without doing violence to his reason.

I am a Christian, again, because I am a scientist. I do not mean that I devote all my time to scientific investigations, but I believe in the scientific method of "gaining and verifying knowledge by exact observation and correct thinking." An ounce of fact is worth a ton of theory. A group of philosophers were debating the question whether a fish introduced into a bucket of water would increase its weight and one of them had proved to his own satisfaction that it would not. "Let us try it," said Benjamin Franklin. A bucket of water was brought in and weighed. Then a fish was introduced and the weight was increased by the weight of the fish. That settled it.

It is scientific to account for facts with little heed to fads and fancies. And there are two facts which must be accounted for—the Bible and Jesus Christ. The proofs in favor of the Bible as the inspired word of God and of Jesus Christ as the incarnate God are so abundant and conclusive that any one who knows the proofs and refuses to accept the Bible as inspired and Christ as divine does violence to the scientific spirit. He refuses to admit the existence of the sun while it is shining in the heavens.

I am a Christian, once more, because I am a man whose every need of mind and heart is met in Christ, "the Son of Man." His ideal of human greatness attracts me. The worldly ideal is power which masters others. Christ's ideal is service. "Whosoever will be chief among you let him be your servant, even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many." The climax of this greatness is seen on the cross as the Son of Man "suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God," settling forever the sin question for all who will accept him as Saviour and Lord.

WOOD'S ANNUAL VISIT

Congressman Meets His Somerset County Constituents Today.

HE LISTENS TO THEIR VIEWS.

No Objections to His Course at Washington—He Receives Many Compliments.

Representative Ira W. Wood, of the Fourth New Jersey district, spent this morning at the Hotel Kensington parlors in conference with his North Plainfield constituents as is his annual custom. This afternoon he will complete his tour of Somerset county, after visits to Bound Brook, Somerville and adjacent districts. He is accompanied by his secretary.

Many prominent boroughites greeted the Congressman when he appeared here and warmly commended him for his record at Washington. Not one objected to his course in any matter of National moment. He was highly complimented on his custom of appearing annually before his constituents.

"I realize that it is impossible for my constituents to spare the time every year to meet me in Washington, and besides it would not be just to expect them. So I have solved the matter by meeting them all, once a year, at their own homes. This I do to learn their views on current political matters. I am their servant and therefore to properly represent them I must know their opinions on matters of great moment. That's why I am here today. You see every year I go about my district and get in touch with the people. When I get to Washington I know just where by people stand and I can act accordingly. See the point?"

The representative of The Daily Press told the congressman that he did see the point and that his methods were highly creditable.

Gathered about the Congressman at the Hotel Kensington this morning were a group of boroughites. They asked him many questions and he answered frankly and fully. No objection was heard to anything he had done at Washington but many were the praises heard.

"I want to do what you want me to do," said the Congressman, "and it is up to you to give my the why and wherefore."

WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE SUBJECT OF DEBATE

Should women be granted the privilege of voting? This question was debated by the Dutch Arms, the Men's Club of Trinity Reformed church, last night, and in the opinion of the judges female suffrage, notwithstanding the arguments in its favor, is a long way off. During the evening Dr. Buchanan's "bunch" furnished some delightful music and after the judges had rendered their decision ice cream and cake were furnished the fifty members present.

The question before the debaters was "Resolved, That suffrage should be given women." Russell Doeringer, Edgar F. Sheppard and Charles M. Dolliver took the affirmative, while Harold Schenck, Cornelius Schenck and Fred Smith, Jr., opposed them. The judges were Rev. Dr. E. G. Read, Harry W. Marshall and W. A. Woodruff. Edgar Sheppard summed up for his side and Fred Smith, Jr., did a like service for the negative.

Harold Schenck and his brother were quite ready with their arguments against the women on the grounds of unconstitutionality and termed the idea as a mere expedient.

Reception for Fiancee.

A reception was given Thursday afternon by Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Ashley at their home in East Orange, in honor of Miss Elsie Howell Miller, of Sparkill, N. Y., the fiancee of their son, Rev. Morgan Ashley, rector of St. Stephen's church, this city. The house was decorated with a profusion of pink roses and chrysanthemums, many of which had been sent as gifts to the guest of honor. The table was decorated with white chrysanthemums and was presided over by Mrs. William Runkle and Mrs. Alfred B. Jenkins. The affair was purely for East Orange folk.

McCartney Must Behave.

Bernard McCartney, a thirteen-year-old schoolboy who has been playing hookey from school for the past few weeks, was threatened with a reform school sentence this morning by City Judge Runyon if he does not mend his ways and mind his parents. He has been before Judge Runyon before on a similar charge.

WHITE PLAGUE MEETING HERE ON DECEMBER 14

When the committee on publicity from the Society for the Prevention and Relief of Tuberculosis, met at the office of Dr. F. E. DuBois yesterday, Miss Mabelle Phillips, who was appointed to secure speakers for the mass meeting to be held at the Plainfield High School audtorium on Tuesday night, Dec. 14, reported that the following would probably be present.

Dr. S. Adolphus Knopf, one of the foremost authorities on tuberculosis and the author of the book, "Tuberculosis, a Preventable and Curable Disease," a copy of which can be found at the public library; Dr. James Miller, who is in charge of the tuberculosis patients at Bellevue Hospital; Homer Folks, secretary of the Charitable Aid Society of the State of New York; Bishop McFaut, of Trenton, whose interest in the work is well-known and who is the chairman of the State commission appointed by Governor Fort to consider the subject. There will also be local speakers.

The purpose of the meeting is to interest the residents of Plainfield in both the means for prevention of the spread of tuberculosis by those already suffering from the disease and the best method of treatment of those affected and to appeal for financial support of the sanatorium, which has been erected on the hospital grounds.

Efforts will be made to secure a city-wide membership. Those desiring to assist in the work are requested to send $1 the annual membership charge to J. P. Murray, 737 Watchung avenue.

MISS ELSIE FERGUSON IN "SUCH A LITTLE QUEEN"

In presenting Elsie Ferguson as a star in Channing Pollock's delightful comedy success, "Such a Little Queen," Henry B. Harris guarantees to the playgoing public the same satisfactory return for their investment as they receive whenever witnessing a performance of Robert Edeson or Rose Stahl, his other two famous stars.

Miss Ferguson first flashed across the theatrical sky as a stellar possibility by her pronounced hit in New York in "Pierre of the Plains." That she had unusual ability was made evident by her wonderful performance in "The Battle." This success was repeated in "The Traveling Salesman." When "Such a Little Queen" was produced at the Hackett theatre, New York, Miss Ferguson was made a star by press and public. That her performance in this city on Monday evening will awaken the same enthusiasm as it did during her five months' run in New York is beyond question.

DUTCH ARMS AIDING MUHLENBERG HOSPITAL.

At the meeting of the men's club of Trinity Reformed church last night it was decided to join forces with the men's clubs of other churches in this city in a concerted effort to raise funds for Muhlenberg Hospital.

It was first proposed that each club subscribe a certain amount to be paid by the members, but a new scheme was presented to the club last night by Harry Marshall and it was unanimously adopted. It is that all the clubs acting as solicitors for funds shall have the city divided into sections and each member will be assigned to a certain district in which he will make a house to house canvas for funds. In this way the burden will bed istributed fairly and more people will be enabled to contribute to the scheme and thereby become interested in the hospital

Musical Service.

The choir of Grace M. E. church will give a musical service next Sunday evening under the direction of the organist, Miss Alice Carroll. The following numbers will be sung: "From Every Earthly Pleasure," Liszt-Shelley, soprano obligato and chorus; "Ye Shall Go Out With Joy," Barton; soprano solo, "My Redeemer," Mrs. E. D. Young, Buck; "Magnificat," Berthold Tours.

Will Give Japanese Operatta.

The operatta entitled "The Japanese Girl," to be given by the Cup Bearer's Circle of The ing's Daughters, on December 9 and 10, will be followed by an informal dance after the last performance. As the reserved seats for that evening are nearly sold, extra seats will be furnished which may be paid for at the door.

Mrs. M. J. Bowman, of Perkasie, Pa., is visiting at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Debele, "Pine Grove Farm," on Rock avenue.

SCRIBE MAKING FORTUNE

"Lew" Thomas Strikes Gold as a Trader in the Philippines.

PILING UP HIS WEALTH FAST.

Former Plainfield Reporter As a Trader with Filipinos Soon To Be a Millionaire.

Lewis Thomas, of Dunellen, formerly a local newspaperman, is rapidly making a fortune in the Philippine Islands according to letters written by Thomas to his relatives and friends at Dunellen. A couple of days ago Wilson Frederick received an interesting letter from Thomas in which he said: "Well, old boy, when I blow into old Dunellen again I expect to be a millionaire. I am having all kinds of luck and am getting rich as quick as chain lightning."

Thomas, at the present time is engaged in the trading business on the Island of Luzon. He is gathering in the shekels in trading United States products to the natives for sugar, coffee, furs and tobacco, chiefly. According to reports there is a big margin of profit to be made in the swapping business with the Filipinos, and Thomas is "making hay while the sun shines." In a recent letter to a friend at Dunellen, Thomas modestly admits that he made close to $25,000 in one little deal.

Mr. Thomas left Dunellen about eight years ago. When Uncle Sam advertised for 300 school teachers Thomas quit his reportorial position on a local paper and went to Manila. The school teaching business, however, proved a bit slow for the energetic "Lew" and after one year's work in that capacity he resigned from the service and engaged with a large American mercantile house.

At his new vocation he was successful. The position carried him to remote parts of the islands and chiefly to the Island of Luzon, where he is now located. Thomas readily acquired an inside knowledge as to the business methods of the natives and this alone explains his big success.

While Thomas has been engaged wholly in business enterprises during the past seven years he has had a chain of thrilling experiences on the different islands he has visited, especially after the period of unrest after the Spanish-American war.

In his letters Mr. Thomas is lavish in his praises of Uncle Sam in the methods employed in bringing about many wonderful improvements since that country was wrested from Spanish rule. Thomas declares, while there was some hostility to Americans on the part of the Filipinos at first, all of it has pased away.

Thomas is a graduate of Princeton University.

THAT FLAG INCIDENT WASHINGTON'S OPINION

Replying to a query from this paper as to whether Federal statutes prohibit the display of the British flag on private property in times of peace, the Attorney General of the United States today declined to give an opinion.

The Department of Justice regretted "the necessity for saying that it is not practicable and has never been deemed proper for the Attorney General to give advice upon legal questions to any one other than the President and the heads of the executive departments of the Government."

All the Department was asked was to tell whether there were any statutes bearing on the case. There are none. Therefore, the local police were wrong in telephoning Mrs. Edmund Mackenzie that neighbors objected to the display of the British flag on her husband's estate on the occasion of King Edward's birthday. The police now claim that they did not order down the flag. They only telephoned the conditions of affairs. They had no right to do that.

Will Tell About North Pole.

Professor Harold Jacoby, of Rutherford, professor of astronomy at Columbia University, will deliver a lecture at Grace church Monday night, under the auspices of the Men's club, on the topic, "How Far North is Farthest North?" He will also exhibit instruments such as explorers use. The lecture will begin at 8 o'clock.

Smith Is a Fakir.

Norman Smith, the artilleryman who claimed to have been buncoed out of fifty dollars by a couple of men and a woman, is pronounced a fakir by the police of the borough of North Plainfield. His story cannot be substantiated.

NEW CATHOLIC EDIFICE

St. Joseph's Parish is Planning to Erect Finer House of Worship.

ITS COST MAY REACH $40,000.

Increase in Congregation Makes New Building Necessary—Father Miller Admits Project is Underway.

Having outgrown their present edifice, the members of St. Joseph's R. C. church, of the borough, are laying plans for the erection of a new church with a seating capacity of 1,000 persons.

The church now has seating accommodations for about 400, but as there are more than 1,200 communicants, the space is not ample to supply the members that attend the Sunday morning masses.

Father Miller when questioned on the matter today by a Daily Press reporter, said: "Yes, it is true that our congregation is contemplating erecting a new church, but no definite plans are yet completed, but it is certain that we will have a new edifice in one or two years."

A leading communicant of St. Joseph's in talking on the subject to a Daily Press man today said that a new stone church will be erected next year at a cost of between $25,000 and $40,000.

COMMANDERY AUXILIARY AIDING THE HOSPITAL

The tea and bazaar held yesterday afternoon under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., was liberally patronized and a generous sum was made for the fund to endow a bed at Muhlenberg Hospital. The affair was held in Masonic Hall banquet rooms, which were attractively decorated by the women. It opened at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and continued until 10 o'clock at night.

In addition to the money received from the sale of useful articles, cake and home-made candy, a silver offering was reecived at the door. In this way the receipts exceeded expectations.

Mrs. James Shores Pray as acting president, was in charge, and Mrs. Arthur McVoy was the chairman of the general committee. Each one of the booths were decorated to represent dierent countries and people. At the flower booth there were colonial women. Mrs. Winfield S. Angleman was chairman, assisted by Mrs. W. R. Codington, and Mrs. Edward Cooley. Old women were typified at the lemonade well, where Mrs. William E. MacClymont and Miss MacClymont were in charge. "America" was represented at the fancy booth, Mrs. Arthur McVoy and Mrs. Julius Williams were in charge. At the cake booth the women were dressed as Quakers. Mrs. Frank Payson and Mrs. W. W. Warnock presided.

In the tea room everything was Japanese, the decorations and Mrs. H. W. Marshall, Mrs. Elizabeth Woodhard, Miss Elizabeth Jarrett and Miss Edna Hyatt, who were in charge wore Japanese costumes. Miss Hazel Williams was a flower girl, while the Misses Anna and Ray Warnock were sachet and chrysanthemum girls.

Those in charge of the candy booth were dressed in Dutch costumes, and those presiding were Mrs. James Shores Pray, Miss Leila Druse, the Misses rGace, Eleanore and Mabel Stutsman. Mrs. Edward A. Laing appeared as a Spanish girl.

A feature was the appearance of Madame Fortuna and Madame Nemo, who delighted all telling fortunes and displaying their powers in palmistry, occultism, etc. They did a rushing business during the afternoon and evening.

The decorations consisted chiefly of American flags, bunting and flowers.

Methodist Brotherhood Banquet.

Rev. Linn Hough, of Brooklyn, will be the chief speaker at the banquet to be held at the First M. E. church, Friday night, November 26, under the auspices of the Methodist Brotherhood. Other speakers will be Rev. Dr. A. W. Anderson, of Westfield; Rev. A. C. McCrea, of Newark, and S. S. Swackhamer. The dinner will be served in Vincent chapel

Ball Teams to Dine Here.

The two baseball teams of Cranford and all the club members who desire to go, will visit Plainfield tonight and after witnessing the performance of "Eight Bells," at the Plainfield theatre, will have supper at the Belmont on North avenue. The Cranfordites will leave their home on the 7 o'clock trolley.

STATE'S CHARITY WORK

Representative Men of New Jersey Discuss Subject at Newark Meeting.

MR. MURPHY IS CHAIRMAN.

Mayor C. J. Fisk Among the Distinguished Gathering When Plans Are Outlined.

Mayor Charles Joel Fisk attended an important meeting held at the home of Former Governor Franklin Murphy in Newark, last night, when several prominent and influential men of the State, discussed the question of State charity aid work and methods to improve general conditions.

It was decided to form an auxiliary committee of seven; also an advisory committee to be composed of one hundred leading men of the State, who will co-operate with all State charities with a view to putting the same on a strictly business basis. This advisory committee will raise the necessary funds to establish a permanent headquarters and engage a permanent secretary, where all information pertaining to State charity aid and correction work will be kept and available at all times. Mr. Murphy was made chairman of the advisory committee and the other members will be selected later.

The meeting was called by Mrs. Caroline Alexander, of Hoboken, upon whose shoulders much of the work of the late Miss Emily Williamson has fallen. The outlook is most encouraging.

Among those at last night's meeting were United States Senator John Kean, J. William Clark, Frederick Frelinghuysen, Benjamin Acker, Dr. Leslie Ward, former Senator James Smith, P. Sandford Ross, Mrs. S. C. Jacobson, of Newark; S. S. Palmer, of Princeton; Mrs. Caroline Alexander, of Hoboken; Senator Prince, of Passaic; Senator W. N. Johnson, of Hackensack, and Mayor Charles Joel Fisk, of this city.

EPWORTH LEAGUERS ENJOY OLD FASHIONED SOCIAL

Under the auspices of the social committee of the Epworth League of the First M. E. church, of which Miss Helen Whitney is the chairman, there was held an old-fashioned country social in Vincent chapel last night. The young women appeared in genuine country style with their sunbonnets and gingham dresses and aprons, while the men came in overalls, straw hats, etc., presenting a picturesque picture.

The evening was taken up playing all kinds of old-fashioned country games, and an art exhibit was a feature. "Sweet Sixteen," was represented by sixteen lumps of sugar, but fortunately this information did not reach the Government authorities who are investigating the "Sugar Trust." "An Open Letter" was represented by a large letter "O," and there were many other equally good features. This was in charge of Miss Ethel Pryor.

Candy and peanuts were distributed and one of the happy diversions enjoyed were the several see-saws. It was an informal and enthusiastic gathering and the affair was considered one of the best of the kind ever held. Refreshments of ye olden times helped to make the social complete.

PERMITS GRANTED BY INSPECTOR DOANE.

Building Inspector T. O. Doane yesterday issued a permit to William S. Crook, of 662 South avenue, to erect a pretentious structure at the corner of erckman street and South avenue, which will cost $11,000. The building will be 39x112 feet and will consist of four apartments, "Philadelphia style," and one store and a flat.

FREEHOLDERS INSPECT JEFFERSON AVENUE WORK

Before the meeting, of the Union County Board of Freeholders Thursday, the members of the board were in this city inspecting Jefferson avenue with the members of the Middlesex county board. The purpose of the examination was to determine whether or not the road, which has just been completed, should be accepted as a State aid road. Deputy Commissioner Vail, of the State Commission, was with the freeholders, and as he suggested several slight changes in the construction, no decision regarding the road was made. The freeholders left with the county engineers the decision as to the advisability of accepting it after the changes recommended are made. It is believed that the road will be satisfactory, however, as all that is to be done is to make the thoroughfare a little more sightly.

County Attorney W. R. Codington unofficially said Thursday that four of the five municipalities delinquent in the payment of the county road bonds for the construction work in 1898, due on October 1, this year, had agreed to pay their portions. They are Roselle Park, Summit, Union township and Mountainside. Westfield still holds out

The Westfield authorities made one payment, and claim that is all that is due this year. Some of the freeholders are inclined to agree to this, as some of the money on the bonds is not due until next year. Roselle Park, it appears, has settled its difficulty with Union township. Payments by the municipalities will be made before January 1.

CITY MUST PAY FOR THESE CONVICTIONS

It is unlikely that the Union County Freeholders will bear any part of the expense of gathering evidence here to convict New York department store's agents of selling liquor here. Mayor Fisk, after a conference with Judge Atwater and Prosecutor Swift, left a memorandum with the latter at his request. The total bill is about $1,600.

The major part of the bill, if not the total, will have to be borne by the city, according to Mayor Fisk. It is reported that the prosecutor's office has decided that the county shall bear no part of the expense.

The Cosgrove detective agency presented the bill. The Common Council has not been formally informed of it yet.

Henry C. Krebs to Speak.

Fowl Thefts Alleged.

Minerva Berry and Alice McKinnon, both colored women of West Fourth street, came to court this morning to settle a dispute as to some chicken stealing, or attempted fowl thefts. After hearing both women Judge Runyon decided that the best way for them to get along peaceably was to keep apart. He so advised them.

MACINTYRE IS ACQUITTED

Judge Atwater Orders His Discharge After Hearing Evidence.

INTOXICATION NOT PROVED.

Evidence All in and Final Arguments To Be Made by W. V. Nash, Jr., and Walter Hetfield, Jr.

The trial which brought George MacIntyre, Hugh McIvor, George Mitchell and Walter Kettenring before Judge Atwater, at Elizabeth, yesterday, ended well for one of the accused men when Judge Atwater ordered the discharge of MacIntyre on the ground that he was in no way implicated in the alleged unlawful taking of the car belonging to William Gramer, from the automobile garage of the F. L. C. Martin company on July 13 last.

The other men will have to abide by the decision which may be reached on Monday, when William V. Nash, Jr., sums up for the defendants and Walter Hetfield, Jr., makes his final argument for the prosecution. It is claimed by the prosecution that the car which belonged to the president of the German American Isurance Company was taken without the consent of the owner, and that the four men went on a joy ride and recklessly drove the car so that it was wrecked.

According to the evidence adduced yesterday the men were not in toxicated as was claimed and Dr. Ramsey, of Perth Amboy, who examined them immediately after the accident so testified. It was also shown that the road by which McIvor had intended to take the car back from Plainfield was unsafe and he was advised to follow the road by way of New Brunswick. In following this advice the accident happened, the car being swung toward a telegraph pole by trolley tracks. The evidence was all in yesterday afternoon and the counsel for both sides will sum up on Monday.

The instant acquital of MacIntyre has given the other accused men hope of a similar result for themselves. It is understood that MacIntyre will regain the license which was revoked and will obtain a position which is awaiting him.

CO. K. TO ENTERTAIN CIVIL WAR VETERANS

The non-commissioned officers of Co. K held their weekly meeting in the armory last night and took up the squad and column turn movements under the instruction of Quartermaster Sergeant George Apgar and the fix and unfix bayonets under instruction of Corporal Philip Winters.

The weekly drills by the non-commissioned officers are following the suggestion of First Sergeant N. H. Hort and are very beneficial to the officers. Many points are brought out and discussed in this way that could not be taken up by the company, as the "non-coms" take up every movement in detail.

After the half-hour instructions, a meeting of the non-commissioned officers' association was called by the chairman, Sergeant Hort, during which time the committees reported all arrangements completed for the entertainment in honor of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., Monday night. At that time Captain Harry B. Kitchell will drill the company for one hour and a half without a rest. It is his intention to take up the entire manual of arms as this will no doubt be interesting to the old soldiers. Refreshments will follow the drill at which time Captain Sylvester, of Princeton, inspector of rifle practice of the State, will present the trophies won by the company during the past year and Major Martin, of Elizabeth, a former captain of the company, will present the medals won by the men during the last season of indoor rifle practice.

Speeches will be made by the members of the G. A. R., relating to personal reminiscenses during the Civil War and tell of the difference between the commissary department and drill regulations. A large representation of the G. A. R. is expected and the committee has spared no expense to make their visit enjoyable.

The next social gathering will be held Monday night, December 20, when Co. C, of Elizabeth, will be the invited guests. These affairs are the work of the non-commissioned officers and are bringing the social life of the company very much to the front.

Mr. and Mrs. David T. Kenney, of this city, are registered at the Hotel Wolcott in New York city for a few days.

HE CARRIES MILLIONS OF LIFE INSURANCE.

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 20.—An insurance policy of $1,500,000 has been applied for on the life of George E. Nicholson, forty-nine years old, a cement manufacturer of Kansas City, by two of the companies of which he is head. Insurance men say this is the largest amount of life insurance ever sought at one time upon the life of one person in the history of insurance.

From 9 o'clock in the morning until 9 o'clock Wednesday night twenty-five physicians, representing different insurance companies, were examining Mr. Nicholson. After it was all over, physicians declared he was in perfect physical health, and local agents of the different insurance companies said the policy undoubtedly would be issued.

Mr. Nicholson is president and general manager of the Iola Portland Cement Company, the United Kansas Portland Cement Company, the Dixie Portland Cement Company and the Iowa Portland Cement Company. He already has four insurance policies on his life aggregating $325,000, so that when the additional policies are issued he will have nearly $2,000,000 insurance.

Most of the amount was taken by the Mutual Life and the Equitable Life, of New York. It will, it is said, be reinsured partially.

ELKS BUY PLOT.

Trenton Lodge to Erect $30,000 Clubhouse.

Trenton, Nov. 20.—Negotiations were completed yesterday by Trenton Lodge, No. 105, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, for the purchase of the old home of Peter Katzenbach, 120-122 North Warren street, and this will be followed in the early spring by the razing of the present house and stables on the tract and the erection of one of the finest lodge homes in the State.

The purchase price of the premises was $15,000, and it is proposed to spend about $30,000 in the erection of a new building.

The Great Strides of the Public Service Corporation.

The recent statement concerning the financial operations and earnings of the Public Service Corporation which was set forth in the letter sent to J. P. Morgan & Co., and Drexel & Co., by President Thomas N. McCarter, has been received with great interest and satisfaction by the stockholders of this corporation.

It is doubtful whether the public generally, and even Public Service stockholders at large, have realized the growth and extent of the business of this corporation. While it has been generally known that Public Service has been increasing its gross business from year to year, the figures showing the steady increase from nineteen millions during the first nine months of this year, must have been a revelation to a great many people.

This statement is one that should be studied with care, for it certainly reflects credit upon Public Service management.

There is a growing demand for Public Service securities outside of the State of New Jersey as well as in it. The Fidelity Trust Company of Newark, who make a specialty of the guaranteed underlying securities of this corporation, report that the number of sales outside of the State of New Jersey has increased materially within the last six months, showing the growing interest in New Jersey's best securities outside of the State.

The Fidelity Trust Company is in an unusually advantageous position to pass upon the value of these securities. The close association of their officers with the detail of management of the Public Service Corporation since its organization, and intimate knowledge of the prosperity of the company, make their judgment as to the desirability of Public Service securities particularly valuable.

With the view of increasing the efficiency of the company in its investment work they have established a bond department, in which not only Public Service securities are dealt in, but other high grade investment securities, stocks and bonds, to meet the requirements of conservative investors.

GREAT BOOK CONTEST

$365 PIANO FREE

RE-ARRANGE THE BOOKS TO FORM NAME OF FAMOUS PIANO

SEE DIRECTIONS BELOW

Arrange the Books on line 1—2 above to form piano name. The word Piano is formed also by the books.

OVER $13,500 WORTH OF ADDITIONAL PRIZES

No Charge of Any Kind to Enter. You Have the Same Opportunity as Anyone Else to Win

We have never known a more interesting contest or one which offered such valuable prizes absolutely free. This combines the fascination of the cut-up puzzle and the skill of arranging the books so as to form the name of a famous piano. The grand free distribution of over $13,865 worth of prizes is of vital interest to any home without a piano.. Be sure and try.

Cut out the books and paste them standing up on line 1—2 so as to form a famous piano name, a familiar name to all, one of the oldest and best known in the musical world. The word piano is also formed by the books and is to be put after the name, thus————PIANO. The most artistic correct answer will be given the $365 Piano absolutely free. Next best correct answers prize certificates as stated below.

Everyone has an equal opportunity. You may get the piano or a high certificate as well as any one else. If you care for music and want a piano, this is the greatest opportunity you will ever have. This contest was especially prepared for pianoless homes, and it will be the means of our distributing hundreds of pianos. We are placing this large advertising sum ($13,865) directly among piano buyers, where it will do the most good. Instead of spending it in expensive magazine advertising, we want piano buyers to earn the piano or the prize certificate by their skill. There is no catch or chance. Read the simple conditions. Send your answer in early. Start on it to-night.

THE PRIZES First prize—A fine new piano valued at $365. Second prize—A certificate of credit for $125. Third prize—A certificate of credit for $110. The next six best answers will be given a credit certificate for $100. Following these in groups of six or more, each contestant sending in the next best answer will be given a credit certificate for $1 less than those previous—that is, six at $99, next six of $98, etc.—until the amount has been awarded.

Special advertising appropriation. In addition to the above prizes, the company will voluntarily issue to each of the remaining contestants a special certificate of credit of $35 as an award for their effort in this contest.

These certificates are good on the purchase of any new Hallet and Davis, Conway or Kimball piano or player piano in our warerooms at regular retail price. Time of certificate is limited. Certificates cannot be applied on any purchase made previous to Nov. 26th. Only one certificate may be applied on the purchase of one piano.

THE JUDGING Disinterested judges will be chosen who will select the winner, and the decision of the judges will be final. All prize winners will be notified. Judges' names will be announced.

SIMPLE DIRECTIONS Carefully cut out the various sized books now on the shelf above the book rack, then arrange and paste them standing up in the book rack so that the letters will form the name of a famous piano, one of the oldest and best makes. The word—piano—is also formed by the books and is to be put after the name, thus————PIANO. The books without letters are for spaces to put between the words. Paste books on line 1—2, and send in the whole book rack. Free to anyone except employees of the Hallet and Davis Piano Co. Only one answer allowed from one family. Send in coupon or exact written copy with your answer, as no answer will be accepted unless this is done. The most artistic correct answer will be awarded first prize, others in accordance to their worth.

In case the judges find two or more answers of equal merit, duplicates of the prize offered will be given to each. All answers must be in before 5 P. M., Nov. 26th, 1909. Copies of this advertisement will be furnished free on application at this office.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

The comment of Mr. Travis that the Western Golf Association had outlived its usefulness and should disband, an Illinois golf association to be formed instead, is too puerile to notice.

The trouble with most of the published Eastern criticisms about the Olympic Cup competition, the policies and rules of the Western Golf Association, is that the writers do not stick to the truth in their statements of facts.

The talk of rebellion and secession is based on the wrong hypothesis. An independent and soverign body cannot secede, as it owes allegiance only to its own constituents. The Western Golf Association is a sovereign body, and, as such, it has the right to manage its own affairs without being subject to the charge of treason, rebellion and secession. If the clubs composing the Western Golf Association deem it for the best interests of the game to change its name and expand its territory they will do so. If they do not favor this policy the association will remain as at present constituted.

Just where the Western Golf Association stands on this question will probably be pretty clearly determined at the coming annual meeting of the organization, when a motion will be made to change its name. The nominating committee, by the way, has presented the following ticket:

President, Horace F. Smith, of Nashville, Tenn.; vice-president, E. A. Engler, of Glen View; secretary, Charles E. Willard, South Shore Country Club; treasurer, Charles T. Atkinson, Midlothian. Directors—Wendell Hertig, of Minneapolis; Frank L. Woodward, of Denver; Clarence Stanley, of Indianapolis; W. C. Fownes, Jr., of Oakmont; J. D. Cady, of Rock Island.

The fact that Mr. Smith is president of the Southern Golf Association suggests fine politics, for it can scarcely fail to strengthen the already friendly relationship existing between the South and the West. It is also significant that the first three directors are officers of the Minnesota, Trans-Mississippi and Indiana Golf associations, respectively.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Elsie Ferguson, this season starring in "Such a Little Queen," has long been an ardent collector of books dealing with Shakespeare. The other day she visited an old-fashioned shop and came across a volume that bore the imprint of 1679. It was a series of brief personalities on famous characters contemporary with the Bard of Avon. Miss Ferguson purchased it at once, and when glancing through it at her hotel, discovered that Shakespeare was nick-named by his associates "Left-handed Will," a name given him because he used his left hand in writing. Comment was also made of the peculiar way he held his quills. "Such a Little Queen" will be at Plainfield theatre Monday night.

"Rip Van Winkle," with Thomas Jefferson in the title role, will be the offering at the Plainfield theatre Thanksgiving Day, matinee and night. There is no actor or play before the American public today that more thoroughly delights the young folks, and the old too, for that matter, than Thomas Jefferson and "Rip Van Winkle." We have enjoyed his "Rip" time and time again, laughed at his quaint sayings, and shared his sorrows. Our grandfathers saw his grandfather in the same character. Our fathers have told us of his father's delightful "Rip" and our hope is that our children and grandchildren, too, will have the pleasure of seeing Mr. Jefferson's delightful performance of this grand old play.

The wife who is afflicted with a husband of the "I-gave-you-a-quarter-last-week" variety should persuade, cajole or entice him into going to see "The Thief," the remarkable husband and wife play by Henri Bernstein, author of "Israel" and of "Samson," when it comes to the Plainfield theatre Saturday, November 27. The play is said to contain a wholesome lesson for that kind of husband, as well as an absorbing story that will interest the wives.

The only play that ever had the endorsement of the United Commercial Travelers of America and the Travelers Protective Association, is "The Traveling Salesman," James Forbes' comedy success which Henry B. Harris will present at the Plainfield theatre Wednesday night, December 1. Incidentally it is the only play that has ever been written that truthfully depicts that most interesting of all American characters, the commercial drummer with positive fidelity.

Plain Field Notes and Queeries

By Druid

The form of superfine language is getting to be a virtual confession that we are either losing, or ashamed of, our mother tongue. A swimming bath calls itself a natatorium, in Chicago a theatre is an auditorium, our linen must be laundrified, laundered, or anything equally elegant, now that washing is vulgar. We see our public "sports" in the stadium now, give our carriages Frenchified names, and revel in horseless spectacles in a sham Hippodrome. What a treat it is to dwell in a place of city dignity and garden beauty, that bears its natural plain English name with quiet pride and lives up to the modern ideal of an Eden town. To one of the none too numerous tribe of ancient Druids, who love old Mother Nature above all the fal de rals of the sons and daughters of Art, this Plainfield, with its thousand hives and homes nestling in groves of sheltering trees, allures with the charm of a restful paradise after the demoniac din of the rock-crushing, heart-racking torture machine called New York.

Last week's joyous outbreak of sunshine recalled a famous Gipsy wedding in another plain field long ago and far away. The hardy patriarch skipped in the merry dance as lightly as if he had been the twin of his laughing bride in her teens, and here came grim November in his nineties capering with juvenile June, all forgetful that her sunny flirt with him will die with the turkeys. So, even more fascinatingly than in summertide when sunshine is common, verging on superfluity, the Druid blood was set a-tingling and feet a-fidgeting to roam the pleasances of Plainfield, the good town whose people are in happy ignorance of the ups and downs of life. Their crooked places have been made straight and their ways are all smooth. One was sure that the natives must all be of the Walker family, and it was a bit of a shock to note that there is actually a mixture of Wheelers, Ryders, Stokers, and even a few Swifts. Now this is a sad sight for the ghosts of the old Druids who ironed out the once crumbled field and made it plain that health, happiness and long life are the heritage of the wise Walkers.

Charming, too, was last week's revival of the ancient Druidical mysteries. As one lovingly threaded the sacred groves of bald-headed trees along the chessboard lay-out, and tearfully crushed the poor prostrate purple and gold leaves, carpet glorious enough for the gods to tiptoe over, one felt oneself as brutish as an ox. Then one spied a pillar of cloud soaring aloft, then more, and still more, with a grateful fragrance dear to the bloater and the bacon that once was merry little pig. No ox-like indifference to the fate of fallen creatures, be they humans or only leaves, inspires the keepers of the plain field to offer up these withered remnants of summer glory in flames to rival the June sun. It is a cheap, but a beautiful portical sacrifice by Druidical city fathers in unconscious prepetuation of the mystic rites of their ancestors who sanctified the humble misletoe for our Chirstmas festivity.

So the minor prophets are preparing us for the extinction of our brother, the horse. The notion must spring from envy. He is a nobler looking fellow than we mere two-leggers. He does not depend on tailors and barbers for his beauty. He has graces, powers, virtues that we sadly lack. He licks us hollow in the art of walking without the dancing master's aid. He outruns us, either of his pair of legs can carry double the weight of ours; he manages to live in beauty and health without having to kill and eat his feebler fellow-creatures who have no chance to defend themselves against the man with the knife. Who, but for fashion, which is luxury, would seriously prefer to sit above a set of wheels and be whirled along like a baby in its carriage, by a machine with odors of the bottomless pit, where he can share the joy of a canter with a horse, capable of equal delight and not much less sagacity? What is there in strapping oneself up like a mummy, to avoid natural exercise, and then only pretending to be a half and half locomotive engine driver, toying with a wheel? The railway man is doing heroic work, and is a servant of the public: The other is sometimes a nuisance, always a peril.

That funny scare over a sight of the British flag, really, it momentarily pushes Plainfield back to the Druidical age, only the Druids had sense in their heads and always carried a strong backbone. It is a fact, well known outside the police precincts of this otherwise all-wise town, that there has been peace between the Stars and Stripes and the British Union Jack these ninety-five years. New York apologized for its feeble display of the British flag during the Hudson-Fulton celebration because of the difficulty of getting a supply. Britons will lay in stock enough to enable them to give due honour to future friendly celebrations.

Interesting, very. Here stands a church, Crescent Avenue church. Was it a minister, or a loyal deacon, who in naming the streets did so to the honor and glory of his favorite preacher? Just past the church we arrive at First Place, so does the preacher in his preachment. Then comes Second Place, and then Third and last Place. But the crescendo of Crescent avenue solaces the slight feet upon the dwellers in Second and Third, reminding them of the prophecy that the last shall be first.

As we recall certain notorious cases in courts of what is supposed to be just justice, the wonder grows that so smart a nation as this does not do away with courts number one, two and three, and hold the first trial in the last court. The waste of legal talent is ridiculous, the waste of public money is shocking, but the waste of public respect and faith is tragical. Once upon a time it used to be a wicked sneer to say that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor. But now, on our twentieth century pinnacle of blessed Progress, the libellous sneer has come to be a universally admitted fact and scandal. What's the remedy? Doctors' prescriptions are not the actual medicine, Parliaments, forums, editorial sanctums, are the million oracles of the streets, pulls and dinner tables are handing out splendidly worded prescriptions. Who takes them to be filled? Does the right drug store exist? If it does, can the owner afford to hand out the remedy? Who is to administer it?

EXPERTS TRY TO TRAP WRITER OF CIRCULARS.

New Brunswick, Noc. 20.—An arrest is expected shortly in the case of County Collector H. Raymond Groves, who received with other local citizens Saturday before election a circular mailed with other campaign literature from Newark of a defamatory character. Handwriting and typewriting experts have been at work here since the receiving of the circulars, and it is believed the typewriter with which the envelopes were addressed is now in possession of the prosecutors.

These experts have been securing samples of typewriter work from many offices in this city, paying big sums to some of the girls and other clerks. An Underwood machine, it is said, was sought, and the evidence so far at hand is such that the prosecutor is ready to lay the matter before the grand jury. That body meets here next week prior to Thanksgiving Day. Local typewriters, it is said, have been examined by the prosecutor, and sensational developments are expected.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., will meet Tuesday night in regular session.

PARK AVENUE BAPTIST ENDEAVORERS ANNUAL

Vocal and instrumental music, interesting reports and an address, combined to make the twenty-first anniversary meeting of the Endeavor Society of the Park Avenue Baptist church a delightful occasion last night. A feature was the reading of a letter of congratulation from Rev. A. E. Finn, former pastor, who is now at Rochester, Pa. This was read by Miss Cora Brokaw, and was much enjoyed.

The meeting began with a fifteen minute song service, followed with a prayer by Clarence B. LaRue, president of the local C. E. Union. As president of the home society, Chas. F. Dayton was in charge, and he made a few remarks of welcome. Miss Cora Brokaw, corresponding secretary, then read the birthday greetings.

The address of the evening was made by J. Harry Manning, former general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. He spoke on "The Blessing of a Thankful Heart," and his talk was well received. He encouraged the members by his earnest words.

Then followed a violin solo by Miss Arline Brown, with closing words by President Dayton, prayer by Rev. C. L. Goodrich, of the Congregational church, and the Mizpah benediction. A social hour was then enjoyed, during which refreshments were served. Miss Mamie Clark presided at the piano and Miss Arline Brown played the violin.

The social committee in charge comprised Miss Mary Giles, chairman; Miss Anna W. Clark, Miss Mamie Clark, Miss Sarah Boyd, Miss Hannah Boyd, Mrs. C. Dalby and Miss Bessie Giles.

In the fall of 1888 a number of the young people of the church organized themselves into an Endeavor society with the purpose of fitting themselves for greater usefulness to Christ and His church. The history of the society shows that the purpose has borne abundant fruit and many of those who have since gone out into the activities of life, both secular and religious, owe their present ability to the early training received in the society.

Some of those who when they entered the society were backward, have since become some of the most useful and helpful members. Starting in the pastorate of the Rev. Asa Reed Dilts, the society has enjoyed the ministry of three pastors—the Rev. Mr. Dilts, Rev. J. W. Richardson and Rev. A. E. Finn, who has recently been called to Rochester, Pa.

The presidents and other officers have included men and women engaged in Christian work both in the home, church and in county and State circles. During his connection with the society, Mr. Richardson was active in the State work of the Endeavor society and among those who also have been identified with State, county and local Union work, are Mrs. Wheaton S. Lowry, Miss Florence G. Hawkins, Miss Cora R. Brokaw, Joseph M. Hawkins and others who are no longer connected with the society, having left town.

Among those who have served as phesidents, are Rev. and Mrs. A. R. Dilts, Mr. Van Sciver, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. C. Skadden, Miss Emma V. Fish, Mrs. W. S. Lowry, David M. Runyon, Miss Anna W. Wyckoff, Miss Cora R. Brokaw, Joseph M. Hawkins and Charles F. Dayton, who now fills the office. Mr. Dayton is active in all brances of religious work, being a junior deacon of the church and engaged in all departments. He has also served for some time as vice-president of the Y. M. C. A.

The other officers of the society at present are: Vice-president, Geo. B. Cratsley; recording secretary, Miss Florence G. Hawkins; corresponding secretary, Miss Cora R. Brokaw; treasurer, Miss Elmira C. Runyon; junior superintendent, Miss Alice L. Brown. The society now numbers about forty members, several charter members still being on the roll.

WIRE THIEVES CLEVER IN STRIPPING POLES.

Wire thieves, on Wednesday night, stripped the poles of the Western Union Telegraph Company and the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company of about 1,500 feet of copper wire and temporarily crippled both lines in Linden Township, between the old racetrack and the Linden and Rosedale cemetery.

The thieves rigged up an ingenious device in the shape of a boatswain's chair, by which one man was hauled to the top of the pole and then clipped off the wire. The thieves were evidently scared away in their work, for in their hurry they left this apparatus behind.

CONSERVATISM IN CLOTHES.

The reluctance of the average Englishman to alter the dress that he has been accustomed to wear at home, even when it is most inappropriate to the climate in which he finds himself, has often been noted in this country, says The Literary Digest. According to a South African physician, Dr. Wilfred Watkins-Pitchford, it is the cause of much suffering and no little illness in that country.

In a presidential address before the public health section of a recent South African medical congress, he lays great stress on the importance of the attitude of individuals to the hygenic customs of the community, especially as regards hteir clothing, their food and their dwellings. Criticism of the utility of social customs, he points out, is especially justified at a time when the inhabitants of a comparatively new country are moving to combine themselves into a nation, for reforms may then be most readily carried out and new ideals established. He points to the clothing worn by Europeans in South Africa as the custom which most invites hygienic criticism, but fears that reform in this regard will be most difficult, as it would have tradition, custom and fashion all against it, and nothing in its favor, apparently, but ordinary common sense.

Dr. Watkins-Pitchford's remarks elicit the following comment from the Lancet: "It is, indeed, surprising to read that the materials and color of South African garments are still largely prescribed by the requirements and prejudices of people in England. When our forefathers began to colonize tropical and subtropical countries they took with them clothes which differed little, if at all, from those of the home material and fashion, and everybody knows that within comparatively recent years our soldiers were obliged to go through their Indian and other foreign service with the same outfit as they wore at home, with the sole addition of a scrap of white linen to hang from their helmets.

We were under the impression that the majority of British colonists in hot climates had at length modified their clothes, at least for everyday wear, in some such manner as has been done for the British troops among them, but Dr. Watkins-Pitchford's sermon shows this not to be the case in the country of his adoption. He might have pointed to the change of manners at home in support of his protest, for of late summers the straw hat and the Homburg have nearly driven the time-honored silken headgear from the London streets, and the example of more than one learned judge has even sanctioned the doffing of forensic wigs during the hot weeks of the year."

YOUTH.

I am the unquiet sister, with the old,
wild beautiful eyes.
Who went forth from my home to sek;
I am the immortal child who yearned for the moon and the star-sown skies;
I am the dreaming girl who burned
For the touch of a god on her cheek.

I am the unquiet sister with the young, ancient beautiful eyes
Whose feet with morning were shod.
I have traveled the long, long road where the caravan smoke and the golden dust up-flies;
I am the dreaming girl who awoke
And discovered a vanishing god.

I am the unquiet sister with the gray, roving beautiful eyes,
Who plucked at the world in its bloom.
Oh, to be as I was at first, transparent, eager, unwise!
For the clear little brook I thirst
Where I drank when the day was young,
And the door of my girlhood's room.

I am the unquiet sister with the old,
wild beautiful eyes,
I have seen so many things—
Hope detained in a sightless tower and graves for questionings.
Love that endured for an hour and the eyes of wounded things.
I would like to go back once more,
creep back, dark-foot in the rain,
And timidly knock at the door I left.
I can never go back again.
—The Century.

Odd Pronunciations in England.

Below are a few names of places that often puzzle a stranger, says London Tit-Bits. Happisburg, in Norfolk, is pronounced "Hazeboro," Abergavenny simply drops a syllable and becomes "Abervenny," and it is alleged that St. Neots sounds more like "Snoots" than anything else. Cirencester seems to vary from "Sister" to "Sizeter." In Suffolk, Waldringfield is "Wunnerful," and Chelmondiston "Chimston," while in the adjoining country of Norfolk Hunstanton is "Hunston," and in the West Country Badgeworthy is "Badgery," and Cornwood "Kernood." Huntingdonshire claims the purest English, but they call Papworth "Parpoor." And not far away is another village of beauty. The motorist turned upon a rough road and asked the intelligent laborer where it would take him. "That road," said the honest countryman, wiping his brow, "will take you to 'Ell, sir." The courageous motorist went on and found Elsworth, which is pronounced "Elser."

Worth Considering.

"The tree grows as the twig is bent." "The child is the father of the man." If you want your boy to be happy and wealthy in manhood, train him for it now. Get him a pass book from this bank and he will soon learn the value of a bank account. The money he will save by the time he is twenty-one will be valuable to him but the habit of economy and knowledge of banking will be of even greater benefit. — BANK NOTES.

WHITE RAT AS LIFE-SAVER.

Instances are common enough where dogs and horses, and even cats, have been instrumental in saving human life; but this is the first instance in the writer's knowledge of such remarkable actions by a rat, says an exchange.

One of the two boys of a Danish family of four named Nelson living in southern Wisconsin, was given a white rat named Whitney, which became so contended that it never attempted to run away, notwithstanding that it was given the run of the house.

Before retiring one night, the husband filled the bedroom stove with soft coal. At about 3 in the morning, Mrs. Nelson was disturbed by something pulling and scratching at her hand and wrist, and awoke to find the room filled with gas, and Whitey squealing and jumping on the floor beside her. She was so nauseated and weak that she could do no more than roll off to the floor and crawl to the stairs. When attempting to descend she fell to the bottom, her head resting near the front door. The cold draft entering under the door finally roused her, and her screams for help brought the neighbors, who revived her husband.

Whitey died peacefully a year later, and a friend of the family diagnosed the case as one of gout.

Remotely Related.

The laywer eyed the woman in the witness-box in patient despair. Then, says the Detroit News, he rallied visibly.

"You say, madam," he began, "that the defendant is a 'sort of' relation of yours. Will you please explain what you mean by that—just how you are related to the defendant?"

"Well, it's like this," replied the witness, beaming upon the court. "His first wife's cousin and my second cousin's first wife's aunt married brothers named Jones, and they were cousins to my mother's aunt. Then again, his grandfather on his mother's side and my grandfather on my mother's side were second cousins, and his stepmother married my husband's stepfather after his father and my mother died, and his brother Joe and my husband's brother Harry married twin sisters. I ain't never figured out just how close related we are, but I've always looked on him as a sort of cousin."

"Quite right," assented the lawyer, feebly.

Sunday School Entertainments.

The Sunday school of the Park Avenue Baptist church has arranged to give four entertainments at the church, the first of which will be on Monday night. The other entertainments will be on November 22, December 6 and 13. The program will be furnished by New York artists.

Musical Service Postponed.

Because of the illness of Miss Winifred Carroll, contralto of the quartet choir at Trinity Reformed church, it will be impossible to hold the special Dudley Buck musical services tomorrow morning and night as planned. The program will be postponed for one week.

Rewarded for Telling Truth.

Because he told the truth little Willie Payne, a colored boy, was allowed to go this morning by Judge Runyon, while his companion, Irving Johnson, was fined three dollars. The two lads were caught stealing coal from cars on the Central Railroad by Detective Licklighter.

"The Truth About Snakes."

Under the auspices of the Tockabatchee Class of Boys, Allen S. Williams will deliver a lecture at the Congregational church, on Tuesday night. The subject will be "The Truth About Snakes."

Miss Nelson's Whist Party.

Miss Nettie Nelson, of Belmont avenue, entertained a number of friends at a whist party last night. Prizes were won by the Misses Eugeline Ayer and Anna Smith.

Director King, Freeholders Adams, Cady, Cladek, Crane, Darby, Doane, Garrison, Haviland, Jones, Krouse, Martin, Meisel, Perry, Robison, Smith, Stephan, Swain and Wilbur—19.

Absent—Freeholder Jensen—1.

On motion of Freeholder Cady, it was ordered that the reading of the minutes of previous meeting be laid over.

Communications.

From the City Engineer of Rahway, as follows:

Rahway, N. J., Oct. 29, 1909.

To the Honorable the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County:

Gentlemen—Application is made and permission asked to construct a sewer through the retaining wall or abutment of the Milton avenue bridge, Rahway, N. J., on the eastern side of the river, said work to be done satisfactorily to the Board of Freeholders, its proper committee or the county engineer. This on behalf of the city of Rahway.

FRANKLIN MARSH,
City Engineer.

On motion of Freeholder Stephan received and referred to the committee on Rahway drawbridge.

From the Borough Clerk of New Providence.

November 1, 1909.

To the Honorable the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County:

Gentlemen—This is to certify that at a regular meeting of the council of the borough of New Providence, Union county, New Jersey, held October 11, 1909, the following resolution was adopted by the Borough Council.

Resolved, That Marion avenue, from South street to Livingston avenue, as laid down on a revised map of property belonging to Mary D. Francis, in the borough of New Providence, be accepted as a public road

To which I have set my hand this first day of November, 1909.

JOHN M. BADGLEY,
Clerk of the Borough of New Providence.

On motion of Freeholder Smith received and placed on file.

The following was submitted by County Attorney W. R. Codington:

Plainfield, N. J., Aug. 25, 1909.

To the Hon. Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

Dear Sir—The Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union have requested me, as their attorney, to communicate with you with reference to the sunken barge in the bed of the Elizabeth River near the city of Elizabeth. They inform me that it has been obstructing the river (the same being a navigable water) for some months past, and that they are under the impression that your department would have jurisdiction over removal thereof. We have not, up to the present time, been able to learn the name of the owner of the vessel, and there is great danger of the same being washed against some of the drawbridges across said river, and destroying the same. Will you kindly inform me whether or not your department has jurisdiction over such matters, and if so, whether or not action will be taken to have the obstruction removed?

I beg to remain,
Yours very truly,
W. R. CODINGTON.

The following reply was received to the above.

U. S. Engineer's Office,
New York, N. Y.
Oct. 21, 1909.

1. Respectfully returned to the Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

2. The sunken vessel reported is the wreck of the small schooner Allen Osborn, of Perth Amboy, N. J. This schoonhr is about 65 feet in length and 19 feet in width, and of light draught. In July 1906, the Allen Osborn was loaded at Sayreville, N. J., with brick and fire clay consigned to T. F. & H. C. Sayre, of Elizabeth. On entering the Elizabeth River she grounded and filled. Part of her cargo was taken off and she was then towed to Sayre's wharf at Elizabeth, where the balance of the cargo was unloaded and she was moved to her present position near the upper end of Sayre's wharf which is about 400 feet below the Bridge street bridge.

3. A recent examination shows that the wreck is still in the same position and is embedded in the bottom alongside of the wharf and is not likely to shift its position. There is very little shipping in this locality, and it does not nterfere with the passage of vessels to the next wharf above or to Bridge street, which is a practical head of navigation. It is reported that he owner of this wreck is employed by Mr. Sayre.

4. In my opinion this wreck is not such an obstruction as would subject it to removal by the United States as contemplated under section 15 of the "Laws for the protection and preservation of the navigable waters of the United States." If it has been abandoned by the owner, I see no objection to its removal by Mr. Sayre, the owner of the wharf, or the local authorities.

WILLIAM S. ROSSELL,
Colonel Corps of Engineers.

On motion of Freeholder Cladek received and placed on file.

JOHN H. STEPHAN,
Committee.

Freeholder Swain moved that the report be received and recommendation adopted, which was so ardered without dissent.

By Committee on Soldiers' Headstones:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

Gentlemen — The undersigned, Committee on Headstones, beg leave to report that we have visited the various cemeteries and burial grounds throughout the county of Union, where headstones have heretofore been erected for the purpose of marking graves of deceased soldiers, sailors and marines, and furnished by this board. We find that the character of the stones heretofore used is inferior, defective and not lasting, and that in many instances they are practically useless.

We further beg leave to report that we have had prepared plans and specifications for a stone which, in our opinion, is proper and suitable, and which can be furnished (we having obtained estimates) under the amount authorized by law. The stone so proposed to be furnished is of best Quincy granite, which when placed in place will be two feet under ground; is eight inches in thickness and twenty inches in width, and when set, would be nine inches above ground at the lowest point, with a polished beveled top, and would contain the name, rank, command and birth and death of the deceased soldier.

And your committee would beg to recommend that an effort be made to have the Adjutant-General approve of the design which we have selected as we realize that until such approval is had, no other description of stone can be used than that now used. We would therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution.

Respectfully submitted,
J. HERVEY DOANE,
JOHN N. CADY,
JOHN H. STEPHAN,
JOSEPH PERRY,
Committee.

The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That plans and specifications for headstones for marking the graves of deceased soldiers, sailors and marines to be furnished by the Board of Chosen Freeholders, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act respecting the burial of the bodies of honorably discharged soldiers, sailor sand marines, and marking their graves with a suitable headstone, and the care and preservation of their graves," approved March 20, 1902, be prepared; and be it further

Resolved, That a properly prepared draught in duplicate of the design herewith submitted, and specifications duly certified by the clerk of the board, be forwarded to the office of the Adjutant-General of the State of New Jersey for the approval of the authorities designated in said act; and be it further

Resolved, That the cost of said headstones shall not exceed the sum of fifteen dollars each, as provided for in said act.

Freeholder Adams moved that the foregoing report be received and resolution adopted, which was so ordered without dissent.

By Committee on Soldiers' Headstones.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders.

Gentlemen — Your committee, charged under the law with the burial of soldiers who die without leaving sufficient means to defray funeral expenses, and the erection of stones to mark their resting places, feeling that it is essential for an intelligent performance of duty and the conservation of the county's interests to have a complete, authentic and official record of the burial plots, marked and unmarked, by county monuments, of all soldiers, sailors and marines who served in the Civil and Spanish-American Wars, and were honorably discharged from the service, sleeping their last sleep in the various cemeteries of this county, be it

Resolved, That the task of obtaining and reporting the same to this board for intelligent action in the future, be entrusted to General J. Madison Drake, hereby appointed, who shall make a duplicate typewritten report of his investigation, and receive as compensation for his labors the sum of seventy-five dollars.

J. HERVEY DOANE,
JOHN N. CADY,
JOHN H. STEPHAN,
JOSEPH PERRY,
Committee.

Freeholder Cady moved that the foregoing report and resolution contained therein be received and adopted, which was so ordered on roll call by an unanimous vote.

New Business.

By Freeholder Jones.

Resolved, That a committee, of three be appointed, with power, to replank the line bridge on the Passaic river beyond Berkeley Heights, the same being in a dangerous condition, probable cost of the same to be about $250, one-half to be paid by Union county.

Freeholder Krouse moved the adoption of the resolution, and on roll call it was unanimously adopted. The Director appointed as the said committee, Freeholders Jones, Smith and Darby.

By Freeholder Krouse.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed, with power, to repair the walls of the bridge on Hancock road, near the Standard Oil works, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $150. This road is now being macadamized by Linden Township, and it is not possible to work at all over this bridge owing to its poor condition. If repaired at once the work may be completed this fall.

Freeholder Jones moved the adoption of the resolution, and on roll call it was unanimously adopted. The Director appointed as the said committee Freeholders Krouse, Crane and Stephan.

By Freeholder Krouse.

Resolved, That when this board adjourns it meets again on Thursday, November 18, at 2:30 p. m.

On motion of Freeholder Cane the resolution was adopted without dissent.

TRAIN WRECKED; RIDE IN ENGINE.

The South Amboy-New Brunswick accommodation passenger train on the Raritan River Railroad was wrecked Thursday morning about a half mile from New Brunswick by the derailing of a coach. No one was in the derailed car. The engineer, not wishing to see commuters delayed, invited them aboard the engine and the four passengers rode into New Brunswick on the engine. They were John A. Coan, South Amboy; John Delaney, a student in Senator George S. Silzer's office; Thomas Burden, a clerk in Judge C. T. Cowenhoven's office and Lewis Woods, of South Amboy.

The Raritan River line runs between New Brunswick and South Amboy. Its business has been cut down considerably by the trolley line which parallels it.

RUNAWAY ON R. R. TRACKS.

Horse Gallops Over Half a Mile Over the Ties.

Bayonne, Nov. 20.—A runaway horse galloped over a half a mile along the tracks of the Central Railroad here Thursday. A light carriage to which it was attached was completely demolished. Contractor Samuel Cronenberg left the horse standing on the east side of the railroad. The horse took fright and dashed up the enbankment onto the tracks.

Several trackwalkers failed to stop the horse. Near the East Twenty-second street station it was caught by the baggage master.

Cycle of Death.

The cycle of death, at Proctor's this week is going some, and so is the man who rides in it. It was a big feature in Barnum & Bailey big shows. He is one of the few men who by his sheer nerve, takes his life in his hands three times a day. Sidi, the Emperor's gunner, lifts and juggles cannons, cannon balls, big shells, and is a specimen of perfect manhood. The Kiltie Duo, Scotch lads, dance and play on the bagpipes, and tell witty Scotch stories. DuBois, the clever English illusionist in his wonderful Noah's Ark illusion, wins the applause from an interested audience. The films d'art are as instructive and amusing as usual.

Vice-Chancellor Leaming Thursday made an order staying divorce proceedings brought by Joshua Litchfield until such time as his wife, Sarah, can prepare an answer. Admitting her husband's allegation that she had been guilty of indiscretions, Mrs. Litchfield claims that there was but one dereliction, and she attributes that to a passing weakness. She charged that her husband did not treat her properly and disputes his assertion that she is not a fit person to have the care and training of their two children. Litchfield was also directed to bring the children into the jurisdiction of the court in order that his wife may enjoy their society.

Miss McIntosh, of the borough, has been visiting her father at Battle Creek, Mich., where he is under treatment.

The Battle

By

Cleveland Moffett

Copyright, 1909, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

"Look sharp now," he ordered. "And when you get the signal to lift, lift fast. Ready!"

As he spoke two men began turning at a wheezing air pump, while a third screwed on the face glass which cuts off a diver from the outer world.

He sank with a roar in his ears, sank with his total weight of nearly 400 pounds, and presently landed safe on the deck of the sunken barge. He groped along the deck, searching for the hole in the barge's side.

Ah, here it was! No wonder she sank quickly! Side and deck ripped open to her middle. He made out a line of silver bubbles yonder, steadily ascending. Atkinson must be there, down on the bottom.

Philip lowered himself over the side and sank until his iron feet touched the river bed. Then carefully he made his way toward Atkinson and in a moment saw what had happened. There was much soft mud in the river here, and the barge, heavily laden, had sunk deep in it. A risky job of tunneling, this—a very risky job!

Ah, there was Atkinson now, half sitting, half lying, against a mud bank! But he did not move! Stepping forward, Philip took the hand in encouraging grasp as if to say, "Old comrade, I'm here!" A faint pressure was returned, but Atkinson lay quite still.

Atkinson's life line ran up free, but his hose, the precious way of air and life, was caught under a shattered timber of the barge, which must have lurched over suddenly as Atkinson tunneled under it. And in turning it had caught the rubber pipe before the old diver could escape, and now the end of the timber, hooked over the hose, was imbedded in the mud and the hose was held in a massive V that pressed down upon it with the whole weight of the barge and its load. He felt Atkinson's hand drawing him closer, and, bending over, he heard this message tapped on his copper helmet in the Morse alphabet: "Wife—children—love."

Heavens! The man was dying!

He forced back the tight rubber wristbands and felt for the pulse. There was a feeble fluttering, a spark of life, still.

What could he do? Surely he must save this man!

Then in a flash he recalled the theory that if a diver in trouble like this were to cut his hose and instantly press his thumb over the opening he might live on the air inside his suit until they could lift him to the surface with the life line and get his helmet off.

He remembered hearing the question argued and doubt expressed whether a diver would be able to cut his own hose, for the diver himself might have trouble in getting at it. But this case was different. He could get at Atkinson's hose well enough.

The master diver drew his knife and, bracing himself firmly with Atkinson's hose held tight between his knees, made ready to cut.

But wait! Where were the life lines? He must be quick with the signals to lift after the thing was done! Ah! There they were swaying beside him, two good ropes reaching up through the yellow water, his own and Atkinson's. Three quick jerks on each, and the boys overhead would do the rest.

As Philip gripped his knife again a feeling of revulsion overcame him. After all, he could not do this thing. That hose was a living thing, life and breath to his comrade. To cut it was to bring Atkinson instantly face to face with horrible death. And perhaps there was some other way.

Perhaps if he waited— Then there came to him the ghastly faces of divers he had seen taken from the suits when there had been too much waiting, of divers who had perished miserably in some such plight as this. No; he must act and not delay. He must take the responsibility as a father takes it sometimes at the bedside of a sick child. This was the right thing, the only thing, and—

With a strong, quick stroke he severed the hose. Then instantly he stopped the hole with his left thumb and gave three quick pulls on the life lines, and the next second the two divers were rising to the surface.

And all might have gone well had not the men who were lifting Philip pulled faster than the other two, so that presently he found himself rising above Atkinson.

Philip seized Atkinson's life line with his right hand and clung to it desperately, while with his left he held the hose. He could just reach down to it and no more. And presently, as the men above worked in madder haste, he felt Atkinson's life line sagging above him and knew by the sudden strain that he was holding the man's entire weight, suit and all, with his unaided right hand.

He could not help with his left hand because he dared not move it from the hose. He could not signal the men even if they would have understood him, for both hands were occupied. And with all the love in the world he could not support this load many seconds. It was beyond his strength—beyond the strength of any man.

Now they must be halfway up. He would hold on a little longer, and then—and then came a great roaring in his ears and blackness in his eyes, and the hose was torn from his nerveless hand. He had failed in his effort. Atkinson must die, and in the agony of this thought he lost consciousness.

* * * * * * *

The next thing Philip knew he was lying on one of the bunks of the wrecking scow and the company's doctor was bending over him. He opened his eyes weakly.

It all came back to Philip, and he started up in alarm.

"Where's Atkinson?" he cried.

"Here I am, Phil," answered a cheery voice from the bunk opposite, and, looking over, he saw the rugged face of his saved comrade.

"Ah!" sighed the young man and sank back in contentment.

CHAPTER XIV.

HAGGLETON'S BAKERY TRUST.

HAGGLETON'S plans for the bakery combine were large. He spoke of them tentatively to Philip, adding cautiously:

"But don't talk about that yet. We have got to show these fellows substantial profits before we can get them in deeper. Besides," he added, with a sharp glance, "it won't be a case of profit for all of them."

Haggleton lowered his voice.

"We have six bakers in the combination already. Within a week we'll have ten. Within two weeks we'll have all the bakers around here tumbling over themselves to get in. So," he smiled, "don't you see?"

"What?"

"These outside bakers won't be able to stand against us. Inside of six months half of the bakeshop bosses down here will be working for the combination."

Philip looked serious.

"Is that—is that necessary?"

"It's the law," said Haggleton grimly, "the law in big things and little things, that the master mind rules."

No doubt the arguments advanced by Philip in his own mind to satisfy his own uneasiness regarding Haggleton's methods would have been met by other arguments had Gentle been there to counsel him, but the old diver had been away a great deal with the wrecking boats. And it was not until the third week that Philip was really brought face to face with facts as they were. This came about through his call on Margaret after her return to Mrs. Binney's boarding house.

Radiantly happy, proud of her hero, the girl had yet seen that very afternoon on her return a cloud gathering upon the horizon of their future in common. A baker's assistant whose wife she had nursed through a protracted illness, a man, therefore, sorely in need of continued employment, had appealed to her for intercession. It was serious news, and it was made more serious by Gentle, who was present. The news was that the bakeshop combination had done the assistant a cruel wrong by depriving him of his job in a bakeshop on Madison street. He was a victim of the kneading machine, cast adrift and desperate.

Get another place? Where? He had been to three other bakeshops where men had been discharged on account of the very same machine, and two of them were fathers of families. That was a nice business for Philip Ames to be in, wasn't it, and he calling himself a friend of the poor?

The hustle and worry of business men.

The hard work and stooping of workmen,

The woman's household cares.

Are too great a strain on the kidneys.

Backache, headache, sideache.

Kidney troubles, urinary troubles follow.

A Plainfield citizen tells you how to cure them all.

A. C. Lazzi, 44 Elm place, Plainfield, N. J., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills off and on for five years and from my experience with them, I feel that I cannot give them too much praise. I have to do a great deal of stooping at my work and I think that my kidneys became weakened in this way. I suffered from a dull, grinding pain in my back and also had attacks of rheumatism. Another source of annoyance was irregular passages of the kidney secretions. I finally began using Doan's Kidney Pills procured at Randolph's drug store and I was soon in good health. Since then hard work has brought on one or two slight attacks of backache but a few doses of Doan's Kidney Pills have never failed to give me instant relief."

WANTS OLD FAVORITES TO JOIN IN THIS GAME

Peter Schneiderwind, known as "Pete" Winn, who was the star backstop of the Crescents and other local ball teams twenty-five years ago, has come forth with a novel suggestion for a game next season. Mr. Schneiderwind is at present a resident of Dunellen, and old time ball fans will remember him as the hero behind the bat in many hard fought diamond battles of a quarter of a century ago.

"Pete" possesses numerous bent and twisted fingers, which resulted in games before the padded gloves were introduced. He also figured in scores of furious battles which he caught without a mask. He was one of the first catchers in this vicinity to use the solid rubber protector which the catchers fastened between their teeth as a protection against broken noses. In naming some of the old time stars who would be eligible for such a contest "Pete" gave out the following list:

City Clerk James T. MacMurray, Tom Buckley, George Babcock, Charles Meyer, "Gamey" Nelson, Amos Andrews, S. St. J. McCutchen, John G. McLaughlin, George Johnson, "Wren" Townley, John C. Young, George Baldwin, John W. Murray, Jr., J. Hervey Doane, Joseph W. Gavett and George and Will Cadmus.

MIGHTY BATTLE TODAY

Yes, the Warriors of Plainfield and North Plainfield Clash.

BIG STRUGGLE ON GRIDIRON.

It's on the Giraud Avenue Grounds —Result of Combat Incites General Interest.

Local football enthusiasts have one gridiron contest to look forward to every year and that is the annual struggle between the elevens of the city and borough high schools. This afternoon is the time set for the combat and both elevens are reported to be in fine fettle for the fray, and all of the warriors are awaiting the sound of the whistle which will be the signal for action.

The game will be played on the cricket grounds on Giraud avenue and the contest is carded to start at 2:45 o'clock. In expectations of a big throng the North Plainfield management has made arrangements to rope off the field and have a squad of special police officers on hand to see that no encroachments are made on the gridiron.

The game will be a battle for blood, followers of both elevens agree. Manager Mauger, of the city school eleven, is confident of victory, although he admits the N. P. H. S. is represented this season by the strongest team in its football history.

Plainfield, however, will have an advantage of the boroughites on the weight question. The city warriors average 149 pounds while the average weight to the borough eleven is 140 pounds. In the practise scrimmages during the past week both teams displayed fast form and all of the athletes appear fit for a gruelling battle.

Anticipations of a victory runs high among the adherents of the N. P. H. S. eleven. The borough school has never yet succeeded in defeating the city school on the gridiron. Their best showing was made in 1907 when two no-score games were played. Last year the city school triumphed by a score of 10 to 0.

In doping out the possible result of this afternoon's struggle the borough team has the best of the argument when a comparison is made on paper. Both teams have clashed with Bound Brook High, Holy Cross and the Wilson Military Academy eleven, of Finderne. The records show that North Plainfield played a 0-0 game with Holy Cross, while the latter team vanquished Plainfield High by a 10 to 0 score.

North Plainfield also made a better showing than the city school warriors against Wilson Academy. The soldier boys beat the boroughites 17 to 9, while they beat the city eleven by a bigger score, 23 to 5. N. P. H. S. also excelled Plainfield High in the games with Bound Brook, winning by a 21 to 0 score to Plainfield's 4 to 5 battle.

Hope in the borough school's camp is also boosted by the return of Becker to the game. Becker sustained an injury to his knee in the Holy Cross game and has never figured in any games since that combat. The teams will line up as follows:

N. P. H. S.		P. H. S.
Townley	right end.	Phillips
Dunning	right tackle.	VanZandt
Zeglio	right guard.	Widowson
Stiglitz	centre.	Bellows
Lindsay	left guard.	Ramsay
H. Smith	left tackle.	Carpenter
P. Bailey	left end.	Doane

PARKS TAKE TWO FROM ELIZABETH CLUB

A five man team from the Park club rolled a practice game with the Elizabeth club, Thursday night, at Elizabeth, in preparation for the opening of the Central New Jersey Bowling League season in December. The Parks took the first two games, while Elizabeth captured the third. The first game went to the Parks by a score of 944 to 922, the second by a score of 891 to 847, while the third went to Elizabeth by a score of 889 to 848.

Daniel was high man for the Parks with a score of 225, rolled in the first game. Barlow put up a score of 209 in the third, while Mulford duplicated this score in the second game. Ball also rolled well, making a 193 in the first game. The others were very good. The summary:

FOOTBALL TEAM WILL MEET THE HAWTHORNES.

The Plainfield Association Football Club will meet the Elizabeth Hawthornes at Elizabethport this afternoon. The Hawthornes are a lively bunch and have a number of first-class players, but the local boys are in fine condition for winning and will also be represented by a fast team for this game. The game will be played on the Star grounds, Elizabethport and will commence at 3 o'clock.

On Thanksgiving Day the Plainfield team will have the Maple Field Club, of Jersey City, as its opponents. The contest will take place on the Clinton Avenue grounds at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and should prove a strog attraction.

P. H. S. NOTES.

At a meeting of the P. H. S. A. A. Board of Directors, Harry Van Zandt, the star pitcher, was elected baseball captain for the coming year.

Yesterday Bradford Williams gave an interesting lecture on Shakespeare. He impersonated various characters in Othello and Julius Caesar, taking up the quarrel between Brutus and Cassius. He showed the way in which the voice could be changed to represent a man, woman or old person speaking. In his impersonations he copied Edwin Booth's acting as near as he could.

BOWLING.

By winning two series in the individual tourney last night, Johnny Campbell practically clinched the championship.

Campbell had little trouble in disposing of his opponents, Laing and Stout, last night, with scores below the ordinary.

Stout and Lang had a battle royal it requiring four games to decide the issue, the second game resulting in a tie, but Stout finally won out. The scores:

Campbell		181		191
Stout		172		170
Campbell	152	174		215
Laing	180	169		203
Stout	200	192	167	172
Laing	162	192	172	162

GOVERNOR INSPECTS EPILEPTIC VILLAGE.

Trenton, Nov. 20.—For the first time in many years a Governor of New Jersey has visited the State Village for Epileptics at Skillman. Governor Fort, in company with Colonel Eusten Colgate, visited that institution Thursday and found things much to his taste.

The coming of the Governor had not been heralded to Dr. David F. Weeks, the superintendent, and Dr. Weeks said that is just what he wants—some one in authority in New Jersey to come visit him and the institution when no one knows of the coming. The doctor said he could not have gotten the village in better condition if he had been made aware of the Governor's plans, for he declared, it is always in fine condition and needs no courier in advance to herald the coming of anybody.

Regarding the needs of the institution and the way it is managed, the Governor went into things carefully with the end in view of calling attention to those things needed when the Legislature convenes.

Particularly pleased was the Governor with the juvenile ward, where the children so badly afflicted are housed in a sunny building.

FARMERS FAVOR PATROL TO PREVENT THIEVING.

The Union County Board of Agriculture held its regular meeting at Elizabeth Thursday afternoon. A large delegation of farmers from various parts of the county appeared before the board, and said their losses, during the past season from thieves, who stole their crops of grain and fruit, were enormous.

One farmer stated that his entire crop of apples was stolen in a night. The board, at the next meeting, will appoint a committee to confer with the Senator and Assemblymen from the county to see if something cannot be done to put a stop to this growing evil. The committee, it is understood, will recommend to the legislators that a mounted patrol be appointed to do duty in the farming districts of the State during the period when the crops are maturing, from July to October.

PATERSON REJOICES AS ROGERS' SHOPS REOPEN.

Paterson, Nov. 20.—Business at the Rogers Locomotive Works of late has been specially active with every indication of continuing for months to come. There are now about 400 men steadily employed, and there are orders ahead, it is reported, for 106 contractor's locomotives, eighty-three steam shovels and two dredges. Besides these, other contracts are being received daily and enough work is now assured to the present, or a larger force of employes till next summer at least. These indications of returning prosperity are the subject of glad comment by the tradespeople of the city, all of whom felt more or less acutely the effect of the long shutdown of the works which were only reopened recently.

THIEVES PLUNDER SCHOOL.

Break Into Short Hills Building, Make Rich Haul.

Summit, Nov. 2.—The High School at Short Hills was broken into Wednesday night for the second time within two years. Two flags and small articles such as pocket knives and scissors were taken from the teachers' desks. The theft was discovered by the janitor, John Mandeville, when he opened the school today. As before, entrance was effected by prying open the window near the stoop on the east side of the building, and a large eight-day clock was taken from the wall in one of the classrooms.

Two alarm clocks were taken from the teachers' desks in the other room. One of the flags taken was the large one used on the school flagstaff each day and the other was the flag which had been used by the boys at their camp last year and which was hung on the walls of one of the classrooms.

MIDDLESEX FREEHOLDER SLATE

New Brunswick, Nov. 20.—Freeholders-elect P. H. S. Hendricks, Andrew Ely, Anthony Gebhardt and Alfred T. Kerr held a conference Thursday to fix their slate for the organization meeting which will be held on January 1. The freeholders have had no end of applications for positons. The following officers were slated:

Director, Mr. Hendricks, New Brunswick; county collector, Thomas H. Hagerty, New Brunswick, chairman of Democratic county committee; county surveyor, Frederick Simons, Roosevelt; county solicitor, John A. Coan, South Amboy; county physician, Dr. Edgar Carroll, Dayton; supervisor of roads, James De Hart, North Brunswick Township; jail warden, William Donomore, Highland Park. A South Riverman will be chosen for clerk. The Republicans will probably fight any effort to oust some of the present county officials.

Water Company Elects.

The Bound Brook Water Company has elected the following officers: President, Torbert Coryell; vice-president, Eugene D. Latourette; treasurer, W. B. R. Mason; secretary, David Hastings.

Julius Ball, of Jersey City, has returned home after a short visit with Plainfield friends.

PASTOR'S ANNIVERSARY

Rev. Mr. Broek Delivers Sermon Marking End of First Year's Work.

HIS DISCOURSE WAS HELPFUL.

In the Afternoon Trinity Reformed's Pastor Visits Its Sunday School Session.

Rev. John Y. Broek completed the first year of his pastorate at Trinity Reformed church, yesterday, and in the morning he delivered an impressive anniversary sermon to a large and attentive congregation. He took his text from First Cor. 2:1-2:

"And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God.

"For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him Crucified."

Mr. Broek spoke in part as follows:

"These words contain Paul's supreme motive. He said he came to the Corinthians with much fear and trembling. He was afraid that because of the very simplicity of his message the people might not listen to it. He did not come as an orator. The Corinthians loved the ornate and glittering words. They did not like simplicity. Christ's message was so great, because it was so simple. In simplicity lay greatness. Paul did not come as a philosopher. He feared he might be repelled by the very narrowness of his message. Christianity, judged by wordly standards is narrow. From Genesis to Revelation, the great theme of the Bible is "God in Christ reconciling the world to Himself.' And this must be the preacher's subject fifty-two Sundays in the year.

Paul's courageous determination was preach only Jesus Christ and Him crucified. He did not imply that preachers today must preach only the doctrine of the Atonement. He himself often preached on the Resurrection and many kindred themes in the Christian religion. But the predominant idea of all his preaching was 'Loyalty to His Divine Master, Jesus Christ.'

"The world frequently has itching ears. It often is making an unfair demand of the pulpit. It requests popular and amusing subjects. I am convinced that there is nothing that will do the church or the individual Christian so much good as the faithful preaching of Jesus Christ.

"A business man had returned home from the church services, disgusted. He said: 'My pastor preached about material things this morning. It was a beautiful discourse. I am immersed six days in the week in material things, handling money. I come to church on Sunday to be lifted up to higher and better things. Give us something whereby we will be able to prize the unseen things above the things which are seen.' That was a striking condemnation of the pulpit. Men want a simple gospel, but they do not want a simpleton's gospel.

"Jesus Christ needs to be preached today more than ever before. The attack on Christianity centers about the person of Christ. Never has there been an age when men are doing so much thinking for themselves as today. Reason has taken the place of faith. We demand the mathematical demonstration for every article of our faith. Consequently preaching has become largely educational, instead of evangelistic. Men have doubts. They cannot accept all of Christ's teaching. But the simple preaching of the Cross is able to break down the proudest sort of unbelief.

"Christ needs to be preached, because the Christian conception of life is the highest ideal of life. It touches the blessed and the unblessed. All look to it. Take away our Christ and what is art, civilization or religion.

"Christ needs to be preached because of His influence. For nineteen centuries, the eyes of all mankind have been on Christ in the hour of sadness, worry or joy. He has been the throbbing impulse of life to millions. Men of the twentieth century look to Him. We need the vision of the uplifted Christ for He alone is the remedy for sin and the world's woes and troubles. He, although sinless, entered the arena on our behalf and conquered. 'He who knew no sin, was made sin for us.'

"On the first anniversary of my pastorate, I know of no better theme to present than loyalty to Jesus Christ. I have tried in some degree to present Jesus Christ and Him crucified and to be loyal to Him. It has been an exceedingly pleasant, blessed and fruitful year; to God I give the glory. If the future years that God may spare my life be as blessed I shall look forward to a consecrated ministry of

DIDN'T HE RAMBLE— UNTIL HE WAS PICKED UP

William L. Cramer, a barber in the employ of Edward Kelly, of Somerville, was picked up by Patrolman Payne last night at the corner of West Third street and Fillmore avenue, for acting in a suspicious manner. The barber had more money than men of his trade are credited with carrying and the fact that he carried it in seevral pocketbooks and in every pocket of his clothing led the police to believe that it was not all obtained honestly.

When arrested he was in a condition bordering on dementia, but had not committed any overt act. He was taken into custody for safe keeping. He was allowed to go this morning and seemed pleased that he had not been robbed.

Inquiry at his place of employment elicited the fact that he was in the habit of wandering away in the manner he was found in this city. Mr. Kelley said this morning that Cramer was all right, but had the habit of wandering off by himself and seemed to enjoy the experience.

H. C. KREBS TALKS ON "YOUTH AND MANHOOD"

"Youth and Manhood" was the subject of an interesting talk given at the First Baptist church, last night, by Henry C. Krebs, superintendent of schools of Somerset county. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Young's People Association. Mr. Krebs based his remarks on the parable of the talents, and proceeded to show how it is possible for a person to make the best use of or waste their talents.

He referred especially to the man who had one talent, telling how instead of making the best use of it, he hid it and was reprimanded by his Master. The speaker said that as there are no two persons exactly alike and everyone has his own particular work to do, if one neglects to do his share, it is possible that he may never be done.

Mr. Krebs said that newspaper publicity is not essential to greatness and then cited a number of incidents to show that some of the greatest men in history were those who never got into the newspapers. He admired the Sisters of Mercy for their laudable work. He spoke of the late John Stewart Kennedy, who died recently, leaving several millions to charity. He said that the newspapers found it difficult to get a history of his life or even his picture for publication.

In closing Mr. Krebs made a practical application of his talk to those present. The address was much enjoyed by the large congregation present.

UNION COUNTY DENTISTS TO FORM ORGANIZATION

As a result of a little unpleasantness between the dentists of Elizabeth and the management of the Elizabeth General Hospital, fourteen members of that profession from the county seat held a meeting Saturday night, when steps were taken to form a Union County Dental Association. The matter was discussed informally and it was decided to issue acall for another meeting on Saturday night and invite dentists from all parts of the county to attend. The meeting will be held at the Y. M. C. A. building in Elizabeth at 8 o'clock.

Dr. J. Bertram Stevens, of Elizabeth, was made temporary secretary, and today he will send out notices of the meeting to the county dentists. It is proposed as a result of the organization to establish a regular clinic independent of those held under the auspices of the hospitals and in this way it is believed that better results will be obtained. Another object of the association is to secure such legislation as will protect the profession and advance its interests.

Mrs. Ward Sang at Trinity Church.

Mrs. F. M. Ward, contralto, sang in place of Miss Winifred Carroll, at Trinity Reformed church, yesterday morning and evening, the latter being ill. In the morning Mrs. Ward sand a solo, "Rock of Ages," and in the evening she sang a duet, "Love Divine," with Miss Etta Raybert, the soprano. Her solo work was most effective.

THE CHURCH IN ENGLAND

Congregational Minister Says the Conditions are Amazing There.

TOO MUCH RITUALISM HE SAYS.

Rev. Mr. Nickerson Says There Are Too Many Mediaeval Suggestions in Edifices.

The conditions of the Church in England are amazing, according to Rev. A. C. Nickerson, pastor of All Souls' Unitarian church. Ritualism, he says, gives place to sentiment and formality to love. There are too many mediaeval suggestions in the edifices themselves, he declares, and the cold interiors are not conforming, though extremely quiet and archaic. In their churches and particularly in the village chapels the English people are wonderful although many chapels and churches are non-conformist in scope.

The congregations appear to be more reverent than ours in America but there is a difference in the mode of worship very noticeable. Rev. Mr. Nickerson recalled near all the famous cathedrals in England and referred especially to one service at Welles. Here he said the music was delightful to hear and the singing of an anthem will remain in his memory for a long time. However, to this music there was no real touch of soul, no love, pure formality and very little religious sentiment in his opinion. St. Paul's is said to be never more impressive than it is today, but England is actually aware that its ritual is not fulfilling its destiny, he said.

At Winchester cathedral there was also something lacking in the service. Here there was a listless and wandering attention to the homily of the preacher. The City Temple in London is abreast of the times made so by the efforts of its pastor, Rev. James Campbell, who has said that a sense of sin is not so much needed as a sense of righteousness for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God. Dr. Campbell also says that the religion which is taking hold and which is reaching the hearts of men is that which looks manward and not altogether Godward.

General Booth of the Salvation Army said not long ago that the vast majority of English people do not care to attend any form of service and more than one-third of them are on or over the line of poverty. But the mightiest struggle the world has ever known is now going on and the Christ is coming into his Kingdom. Militarism is taking the place of religion and nations are soon to be humbled. Out of a budget of 121 million pounds sterling spent last year 89 millions were spent for war expenses by England.

HOPE CHAPEL WORKERS ARE AS BUSY AS EVER

The teachers of Hope chapel Sunday-school held an interesting meeting after the regular session yesterday afternoon, when G. Herbert Condict gave a number of helpful suggestions gleaned from the recent State Sunday-school convention at East Orange.

It was decided to hold an echo meeting next Sunday afternoon at the close of the Sunday-school, when Mrs. E. Williams, F. H. Andrews, and John H. Manning, who attended the State gathering will give their impressions of the work accomplished.

Announcement was made that W. D. Murray would organize a teachers training class at the chapel, tomorrow night. The proposed course of studies will cover a period of three months. The teachers of the chapel and the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, as well as several other Sunday-schools have been invited to join in this class. The meetings will be held every Tuesday night.

The teachers consider it fortunate to be able to secure such a leader as Mr. Murray. The primary department of the chapel will observe exercises appropriate to Thanksgiving next Sunday. The main school will have a temperance lesson and H. W. Hermann, teacher of men's Bible class at the First Baptist church, will deliver a short address on the subject.

Two Fire Alarms Today.

Local firemen were called out twice this morning, but none of the blazes were of serious consequence. At 9:04 o'clock they extinguished a chimney blaze at the home of J. V. Beekman, of 216 West Eighth street. At 10.35 o'clock the department was called on to put out a rubbish fire in the rear of Daley Brothers' store at 116 West Front street.

"SUCH A LITTLE QUEEN" AT THE THEATRE TONIGHT

"Such a Little Queen," the play in which Elsie Ferguson will appear at the Plainfield theatre tonight, is the story of how a ruler of Herzogovina, a mythical kingdom, came to New York in exile and tried to learn house-keeping in a Harlem flat. Such a tale would seem to give ample opportunity for unusual situations and some very clever acting. Queen Anna Victoria, ruler of Herozgovina, had trouble in her little kingdom across the water, and in order to seek happiness in foreign lands, comes to America with her prime minister, settles in an up-town flat and starts to keep house just like any other American girl. Here she encounters the ever-present hired girl and the many other annoyances of these same Harlem apartment houses.

The king of Bosnia, also in exile, comes to America and they meet for the first time, although in their kingdoms they were betrothed. The novel situation of two rulers working for a living as everyday Americans, furnished the author, Channing Pollock, with splendid opportunities for comedy and pathos. In the end the queen is recalled by her subjects and again takes up her sceptre and the delightful story ends, as all stories should, in a manner most interesting. Tosee the Queen of Herzogovina mashing Irish potatoes with her sceptre is said to be one of the most comical scenes ever devised by a playwright.

The sale of tickets is unusually large and it is expected that the house will break the season's record.

SUNDAY WINE PARTY NETS BOROUGH $40

Eleven Italians, eight men and three women, were arrested on Chatham street, by Marshals Culver and Pope at 9 o'clock last night for fighting. The fracas was the aftermath of a wine party which is said to have been held at 38 Chatham street and as a result of the melee several of the men prisoners were minus teeth and parts of their clothing.

Nearly all of the male combatants disported disfigured countenances before Recorder Dolliver, which showed that the battle was waged on a fierce basis while it lasted. All of the prisoners were locked up in cells and confined until this morning. After hearing the case, Recorder Dolliver fined each of the men five dollars and suspended sentence on the three women.

WILL GIVE THANKSGIVING ENTERTAINMENT AT CHURCH.

At the Congregational church tomorrow night, the Tuckabatchee Club, composed of boys in the Sunday-school, will give an entertainment in which Allen S. Williams will give a lecture entitled "The Truth About Snakes." Mr. Williams will have several live samples of his subject and some interesting stereopticon views to show.

The object of the entertainment is to provide Thanksgiving dinners for those who would otherwise have to go without. In order that the children may attend they will have to bring some article of food, such as canned goods vegetables, fruits, etc. From the adults a money contribution will be expected and the committee, Carter L. Goodrich, A. Holmes Clawson and J. Leslie Allen hope the contributions of both food and money will be plentiful. E. Leroy Voorhees is president of the club and James McClymont is its teacher.

COLORED MAN HAS A NARROW ESCAPE.

Vincent Rollins, colored, of 659 West Third street, intrying to avoid the trolley car at Liberty and West Front streets this morning at 6:45 o'clock, rode directly in front of another and was tossed about twenty feet, receiving contusions and lacerations which rendered him unconscious. The wheel he was riding was smashed.

Rollins was attended by Dr. James F. Lawson, who found that no bones were broken. The ambulance was summoned and Rollins was removed to his home. He is an employee of Hand's Express Company and was on his way to work.

Congregationalists Unite.

The Swedish Congregational church joined the Congregational church in the latter's edifice last night and short remarks were made by Rev. Englund and Rev. Charles L. Goodrich. During the evening the Swedish choir and string band rendered several selections in their native tongue. A special collection was taken up for the benefit of the Swedes and netted a goodly sum. It was a very interesting meeting.

JR. O. U. A. M. AT SERVICE

Preacher Says Bible Should Be Read at Home as Well as in School.

PRAISES THE ORDER'S WORK.

Some Advice Is Given by Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey to Local Councils of the Order.

Members of the four local councils of the Junior O. U. A. M. to the number of about one hundred attended divine service at Warren chapel last night and listened to an instructive sermon by the pastor, Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey, in which he urged all members of the order to see that the Bible occupies the same important position in the home as it does in the public schools.

Mr. McKelvey lauded the order for its accomplishment in having laws passed which provide for the reading of the scriptures to children in all of the public schools in the State every day in the school year. Mr. McKelvey contended that it was just as important for members, who have families, to insist that the Bible is read daily to their children in the home, with the same vim which characterized the campaign, which resulted in the passage of laws, which made it compulsory to have the Bible read in the public schools.

"Don't make use of the Bible as the magic book in the Order," admonished Mr. McKelvey, "but be consistent, and have it read to the children in the home as well as in school."

Mr. McKelvey in his remarks referred to the life of St. Paul and his preaching, taking for his text, "King Agrippa, believest thou the prophet. I know that thou believest," as found in Acts, twenty-sixth chapter and twenty-seventh verse.

In addition to the delegation of Juniors at the service the members of the Boy's Signal Corp, of the chapel, attended in uniform, and occupied seats in a body.

THESE WAYWARD BOYS WOULD WRECK TRAIN

Five youthful train wreckers, all boys residing in the Netherwood section of this city, were arrested last evening at Fanwood, by Marshal Logan, of the latter place, and two railroad detectives for obstructing the westbound passenger tracks near Fanwood.

The timely discovery of the youngsters in placing tile plates on the track by the officers in all probability prevented a wreck. It was at 5:20 o'clock in the afternon, or ten minutes before the Royal Blue Express to Washington was due to pass the point, and the officers apprehended the boys taking the tile plates and placing them on the rails.

When placed under arrest they gave their names as John Perrine, Vincent Stelor, John and Stanley Hanzel and William Schubert. When asked to explain their actions at the hearing before Judge Sheelen this morning they said they put the tile plates on the tracks to see how far the engine would knock them. All of the youths were fined.

SERVICES FOR HARRY W. LEEK, BURIED IN MORRISTOWN TODAY

The funeral of Harry W. Leek, who died last Friday, after a very short illness, was held yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the home of Mr. Leek's sister, Mrs. U. G. Pierson, 311 East Fifth street. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Charles M. Anderson, pastor of the First Methodist church.

Another service will be held today at the Methodist church in Morristown, where the body was taken this morning. The interment will be in Evergreen cemetery, Morristown. The services yesterday were largely attended by members of the Jr. O. U. A. M., of which Mr. Leek was a member, as well as members of the Democratic club of this city, of which he was secretary.

Disorderly Ones Fined.

John Davis and Stephen Murphy, both West End men, were fined ten dollars apiece in the city court this morning for being drunk and creating a disturbance in a lunch wagon on East Second street Saturday night. They were arrested by Patrolmen Sweeney and Nolan.

Coal Thief Fined.

For stealing coal from the cars of the Central Railroad in the Plainfield yard on Saturday, Antony Audino was fined five dollars this morning by City Judge Runyon. The arrest was made by Detective Pellinger of the Central's force.

EBENEZER AMMOKOO'S VISIT TO PLAINFIELD

Ebenezer Ammokoo, a native of the gold coast of South Africa, who arrived at Hoboken yesterday on the steamship Pennsylvania, made his first public appearance in America yesterday afternoon and evening at the services in the Seventh-Day Baptist church at New Market. He was accompanied by the Rev. E. B. Saunders, general secretary of the missionary society of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, which has its headquarters at Ashaway, R. I.

Young Mr. Ammokoo came to this country to be educated by the Seventh-Day Baptist Missionary Society, and at the completion of his studies, in three or four years, he will return to South Africa and engage in missionary work with the natives. He paid a visit to Plainfield this morning and inspected the local Seventh-Day Baptist edifices. Tomorrow he will go to Ashaway and thence to Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. While in town he was the guest of N. O. Moore, business manager of the Sabbath Recorder.

SIGNOR GOGORZA HERE NEXT TUESDAY NIGHT

Music lovers of Plainfield are looking forward with great interest to the recital by Emilio de Gogorza, which is to take place under the auspices of the Musical Club on Tuesday night, November 30. Signor Gogorza arrived from Europe two weeks ago, and has been giving recitals in the West. The program for the recital here has not yet been announced but it is understood to be practically the same as for his opening recital in Carnegie Hall a week later.

A leading critic recently said of him: "Two things make Gogorza's singing so attractive, a beautiful baritone voice and exquisite art in using it. He has all the command of every tone that only the long and earnest training will give, and this training has enabled him to produce the tone with such perfect ease as to seem the simplest thing possible. There is no evidence of any effort in his singing; all comes so easily and so naturally as to make the audience just as easy in litening to him. This is the perfection of art, so rarely attained by singers who are otherwise greatly gifted."

ALLEGED SHOP-LIFTERS BOTH PLEAD NOT GUILTY

Edward E. Smith and Kittie Smith, alleged shop lifters arrested here on October 13, were arraigned before Judge Atwater in Quarter Sessions court in Elizabeth this morning. They both pleaded not guilty and their trial was set for Thursday, December 2. Their bail was reduced to $400 each.

This pair of clever thieves were caught through the error they made in asking Samuel Millinkoff, of Watchung avenue, for wrapping paper in which to conceal a pair of shoes stolen from Louis Moldensky, of East Front street. When their room was searched, in the home of Mrs. John Stevens, at the corner of Watchung avenue and East Second street, loot to the value of $200 was found and taken to police headquarters. Victims from Elizabeth, Newark and Paterson identified part of the goods found in the room of the pair.

HOLY CROSS' CHOIR BOYS HAVE PLEASANT OUTING.

An outing which was enjoyed to the limit was that held Saturday by 12 honor boys from the Choir of Holy Cross church, who in company with the rector, Rev. George Warner, and Organist Will O'Brien, went to the second hill on Watchung mountain. Here a lean-to was built by the boys and a meal cooked and served gypsy fashion.

During the afternoon a "monkey" climb was indulged in up the highest tree that could be found in the vicinity. Who the biggest monkey was has not yet been discovered, but there were lots of monkey shines. The chef, who cooked a most savory repast, was too modest to give his name. The outing was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

FALLING TREE KILLS TWO

Children of Mrs. Michael Del Paule, of Fanwood, Victims of Burned Tree.

MOTHER IN SERIOUS CONDITION.

Attempted to Rescue Children but Fell Beneath Crushing Branch of Tree.

Marguerite and Nettie Del Paule, aged six and nine years, respectively, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Del Paule, of La Grande avenue, Fanwood township, lost their lives from injuries received by being crushed by a falling tree which was burning yesterday afternoon in the back yard of their home. Nettie, the elder of the victims, died before medical aid could reach her, while Marguerite, the younger victim lingered until nine o'clock this morning when she passed away.

Mrs. Del Paule, who witnessed the heartrending tragedy, from the yard, in running to the assistance of her children was caught under the heavy branches and pinioned to the ground. She sustained severe bruises and contusions about the head and body, and as a result of her hurts and the shock she is in a precarious condition.

The accident occurred at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. For the last two or three days fires have been raging in the wods that adjoin the Del Paule home and yesterday the flames found their way into a bed of dried leaves which surrounded the base of a large chestnut tree.

Efforts to stop the headway of the flames were futile. It was the general impression that the fire would approach no nearer the house when the leaves around the tree burned. Instead, the flames ate their way into the dry bark of the tree, and without any warning, except the cracking sound of the flames, and the snap of the collopsing trunk, the tree fell over in the direction where the two victims were watching the fire.

Striking the ground with hurricane force, Nettie, the eldest victim, was easily brushed aside by the branches and buried beneath a portion of the trunk. Bruises about her body showed that she had been struck by a terrific force which had almost dashed the breath from her body. She was freed from the death trap in less than five minutes by her terror stricken father, but her frail body, was unable to withstand the shock, and she died a few minutes later.

The victim was carrried into the house at the same time little Marguerite was taken out from under the branches. The latter was unconscious in which condition she remained until death relieved her sufferings. She was injured internally, and although County Physician Westcott was in atendance at the bedside for several hours his ministrations were in vain.

Mrs. Del Paule was also carried to her home, in a semi-conscious state but revived soon after the arrival of Dr. Westcott. Although she is badly bruised it is though that she will survive, although the shock and grief attending the tragedy made her condition hysterical.

Careless hunters are blamed for the fires that have been raging in the vicinity since the opening of the season last Monday. Residents of that section have been terrorized by the encroachment of of flames into their yards and in several instances properties had narrow escapes from destruction.

The two victims of the tragedy were interred at St. Mary's cemetery this afternoon at two o'clock.

JOHN HENRY INJURED WHILE AT HIS WORK.

John Henry, of 740 West Front street, who is employed in a large machine shop at Carteret, met with an accident Saturday afternoon, receiving such injuries that will detain him from work for some time. He was standing at the top of an eighteen foot ladder reaching for a piece of lumber, when the ladder broke in the middle, throwing him head first to the floor below.

Mr. Henry landed partially on his side, dislocating his shoulder and severely wrenching the upper part of his body and back. The man was assisted to his home by fellow-workmen and a physician was summoned to re-set the dislocated bone. Mr. Henry suffers intense pain and it will be several weeks before he will be able to return to work.

Trenton Lodge, B. P. O. E., has closed negotiations for the purchase of the former residence of the late Peter Katzenbach, on North Warren street, which will be torn down and a handsome clubhouse erected.

Firemen saved all but twenty of the 500 rabbits housed in the barn of Alexander Pruyning, a fancier at Edgewater, but were unable to save his valuable horse when flames of unknown origin destroyed the structure Thursday night.

A West Jersey and Seashore Railroad freight train struck a milk wagon, driven by its owner, Elmer Corson, of Beesley's Point, at Tenth street, Ocean City, Saturday, instantly killing the horse, while Corson escaped with a severe scalp wound and many bruises.

Atlantic City school authorities Friday refused to consider the opening of school buildings for evening dances. Dancing advocates asserted that night socials in school auditoriums would draw young men and women from public dance halls adjoining saloons.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Sparks, of Mantua, and Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Kastner, of Woodbury, who were injured when struck by a train on the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad crossing, and who sued for $20,000 damages, have settled with the company for $10,000.

Tyler M. Gibbs, who was taken to Bridgeton from Canton, O., on an indictment charging conspiracy to defraud an engineering company, deposited $1,500 cash bail with the court last evening and left at once for Ohio, where he is engaged on a big railroad contract. The case will probably be tried in January.

Soon after a strawride party had left Thursday night, the handsome summer home of J. G. Coleman, at Washington's Crossing, six miles above Trenton, was destroyed by fire early Friday morning. A defective flue is believed to have caused the fire, which occasioned a loss of $6,000, only partly covered by insurance.

The two-story building at 593 River street, Paterson, the store of which is occupied by Frank Lombardi's saloon, was gutted by fire which started in the saloon from some unknown cause at half-past 2 o'clock Saturday morning. Alleging that sparks from a locomotive started a fire that destroyed many acres of timber near Davenport, Ocean County, about a month ago, Ross N. Hood instituted proceedings in Camden Friday to recover $16,000 damages from the Pennsylvania Railroad. Clinton Spader also sued for $15,000, and Jesse Rhodes for $10,000.

Walter Headley, a telegraph lineman, who pleaded guilty to the larceny of two diamond rings, valued at $250, from the home of City Treasurer W. J. B. Stokes, in Trenton, was placed on the probaton list Friday by Judge Gnichtel in Mercer court. Headley took the diamonds while engaged in repairing wires in the Stokes home. Mr. Stokes was one of those who asked the court to show clemency in this case, as Headley's family are in straitened circumstances, one of his children being very ill.

Parents uncertain as to the names to be given their new progeny are causing Atlantic City physicians trouble with health authorities of that city because of the new State law, which insists that certificates of birth must be filed within five days. The law declares that the names of the new arrivals must be given in full, but the worried doctors claim that many parents cannot decide on the names within the short limit and insist on filing the papers without the Christian names. Officials of the Health Board have advised parents to help the doctors out of their quandary.

George H. Morton has been confined to his home on Mountain avenue with tonsilitis.

Opening of Toyland!

A Thousand Welcomes to the Little Folks!

What a wonderland of playthings is this great Toy Store of ours! What imaginings the sight will awaken in the thousands of boys and girls who will come to pay a visit to Santa Claus' headquarters! What dreams will come to little ones after they have feasted their eyes on the wonderful airships, the steam trains, the automobiles, the trolleys and the myraid mechanical wonders that will be revealed to them when they come.

Our great Toy Store, one of the largest in America, constantly maintained with generous stocks of all sorts of playthings, is greatly enlarged for the Holiday Season, and tho the display at all times is very interesting, it will appear as though we had, by some magic, converted the great Toy Shop into a land of make-believe.

There will be many special attractions for the little folks. There will be a Toy Menagerie, a large Railroad Yard for the operation of Mechanical Things, and, very wonderful indeed, the original discoverer of the North Pole!

WONDERS OF TOYLAND

There never were so many wonderful playthings in Toyland as will be seen this year. We have gathered them from far and wide, from the great foreign centres as well as the little hamlets, in some of which the entire population is engaged in toy making. There are toys for little housekeepers—everything from the furniture and kitchen range to the dolly's outfit. There are toys for the budding mechanic and toys to inspire the youthful inventor—toys for the coming railroader, toys for the strutting soldier, toys for brave firemen, toys for musicians, toys for little Indians, toys for enterprising showmen, thousands and thousands of dolls and the rivals—the pink pigs, the Billy Possums, the Teddy Bears and the other bears—the dogs, the cats, the cows, and all the rest of the animal family—we can't begin to tell you about them all.

Santa Claus Will Soon Be Here

In a little while the biggest Santa Claus in the world will take his accustomed place in our Grand Court, where he will look with pleasure upon the thousands of bright and beaming faces that gaze up in wonderment at him as he holds in his hand (as tho bidding the little folks help themselves) many kinds of toys—and in a week the real, living, breathing Santa Claus, who has for years made this store his headquarters, will take his place on the Second Floor and receive the hosts of boys and girls who come to participate in his great free distributions of little gifts.

Address Letters To Santa Claus Like This

Little boys and girls are invited to write letters to Santa Claus, asking for gift things they would like to have from our big stocks.

Write plainly, telling him what you want, and give your full address. Letters can be mailed, or dropped in the box in the store, where the living Santa Claus makes his home.

A LETTER TO THE CHILDREN.
North Pole,
(Santa Claus, Discoverer)
Nov. 20, 1909.

My Dear Little Friends:

I am on my way with all haste from my winter home to Hahne & Co.'s Store, where I will abide thruout the holiday season, beginning Monday a week, and I am bringing with me the most fascinating lot of playthings for little boys and girls that I have ever made. Of course they will all be shown at Hahne & Co.'s and many of them I have planned to give away, free, to all good little boys and girls who visit me on the Second Floor.

I am bringing my great book with me, full of the names of the good little children, and all of them who write to me at Hahne & Co.'s will be promptly answered.

Good bye until I see you.

Merrily yours,
SANTA CLAUS.

HISTORIC MILL BURNED SUPPOSEDLY BY TRAMPS.

Fire, suposed to have been started by tramps smoking in a carriage shed, destroyed the interior of the feed mill owned by James Moore at Glen Moore Saturday morning, the damage amounting to $10,000. About 1,500 bushels of grain and much flour was destroyed. The insurance is about $4,000.

The flames were discovered by John Voorhees, who notified the owner and then summoned the Pennington and Hopewell fire companies. As the fireman had to travel over two miles to the spot, the flames had gutted the building before they reached it.

The mill was a landmark and was built by Philip Rings and later owned by John Hart, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Mr. Moore's grandfather bought the property in 1798 and the mill was remodeled in 1828.

UNEARTH TREASURE BOX.

In the side of a hill laid bare Friday by engineers grading in Forrest Hill Park, Camden, there was unearthed an iron box which had probably been used to bury the treasures of the owner.

The box was taken charge of by William Smith, a special park officer, and was found to be locked. Force was used to open it, and small fragments of paper money, a gold pen and holder, two gold pins and a bundle of papers, almost mere dust, were found. One of the papers appears to be a deed, and the only words decipherable were Philadelphia, No. 333. On the other papers were the names of Harper Jarrett, Zane, Magee, Seitner and Panke.

The finding of the box again calls attention to the old claim of the Zane family, who have for many years attempted to prove their right to considerable property in Camden. The claim of the Zanes, including John, Thomas, Andrew, George and James Zane and Mrs. Emma Kellum, has been in the hands of attorneys for a long time.

The story is that way back in 1600 Camden was inhabited by the Indians, and that Robert Zane married an Indian squaw of the name of Alday, and at the death of the descendants of the tribe Mr. Zane was taken all over the section and the ground and properties were given to him.

Prisoner's Hard Luck Story.

Middlesex County has a prisoner in the county jail at New Brunswick, who says he is James Regan, a boxer and professional football player from England. He was committed by the South Amboy authorities for a term of thirty days for trespassing upon the property of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Detectives found him in a car which had been robbed. He declares that he was on his way to his home, having started from Philadelphia, and reached South Amboy by fast freight when arrested. He is six feet tall and told Constable McCabe a pitiful story on his way to jail. He declares he had to sell his good clothes to get money. He has a sore neck, but does not care to have it examined, fearing the doctor will declare he will have to undergo an operation, thus ending his boxing career.

PRESBYTERIAN WOMEN RAISE $200 AT A NOVEL SALE.

The women of the Pastor's Aid Society of the First Presbyterian church held a sale Friday afternoon at which upward of $200 was raised for the fund of the society. Numerous novelties were introduced among which an orange grove was the most unique. The sale was under the direction of Mrs. George B. Wean, and the music was in charge of organist Clifford Braider. The object of the sale was the raising of money for the purchase of a new carpet for the church which is to cost $1,500.

The chairmen of the various tables and booths were: Flowers, Mrs. J. C. Allen; orange grove, Mrs. Fred C. Lounsbury; fancy table, Mrs. C. E. Herring; children's table, Mrs. Albert Runyon; cake, Mrs. W. W. Dunn; aprons, Mrs. H. A. Pope; candy, Miss Lillian Vail; ice cream, Mrs. G. A. Ballantyne; the waitresses were all members of the church. The affair was considered a most successful one.

The account of this sale was omitted in Saturday's issue of this paper owing to lack of space.

"JOY RIDERS" SUMMING UP POSTPONED BY COURT.

The summing up in the case of the State against Hugh McIvor, Walter Kettenring and George Mitchell, charged with running an automobile on July 13 last without the consent of the owner, had to be postponed in the Union county court this morning, because Juror West, of Roselle Park, was seized with an attack of heart trouble. The court put the matter over until Friday morning.

Winfield S. Angleman and V. W. Nash, Jr., represent the defendants and the former, who has conducted the case, will make the final presentation of the case to the jury on Friday. The fourth member of the party, George M. Macintyre, was acquitted of the charge against him last Friday and was discharged by the court.

At Proctor's.

Some comedians are funny and some are not, but at Proctor's this week are the real trust busters of laughland, and if one cannot laugh at the Imperial Comedy Trio that person has an eternal grouch. Miss Leslie Thurston is a clever performer on the Xlyphone. Grey, Byron and Co. in their interesting boxing sketch give an excellent presentation of the good clean sport, and is a fine chance for the ladies to secure an insight into the manly sport. "Savo," the modern Hercules, is a tower of strength, and is a second Sandow. The wonderful films d'art gives one the chance to see the world, without the trouble and expense.

THE DELIGHTS OF READING.

Reading performs two opposite functions. At its best it creates worlds for us, but at other times its service is to destroy the one we inhabit. The first function is of course the more delightful, for it bespeaks a deliberate choice, leisure and serenity. When the winter landscape is spread over with white glitter, and the faint and delicate tracings of the trees are etched in sepia upon an unbroken gray expanse of sky, when from every crack in the window frames enters a little breath of icy chill, then pure joy is deliberately to take the big leather chair in front of the crackling wood fire, and, to the clicking accompaniment of the little blue and big orange flames, to add an another world to ours, says a writer in Harper's Weekly.

There, in absolute peace and comfort, we let the ladies and gentlemen of the nineteenth cntury come back with their bows and courtesy, their perplexities and joys, their involved relations and final solutions. How thoroughly happy one can be, resting their dancing in the polished mahogany panels across the room, and then again on the printed page where Miss Yonge's shy hero and heroine, having avowed their affection, are so overcome that they immediately take to opposite sides of the street and walk protected by this safe distance.

How nice to go with Becky into the attic where Amelia found her, and where she wrinkles her forehead in a vain effort to remember little George's age, or to read the chapter where Aunt Pullet unpacks the best bonnet before the envious gaze of Sister Glegg and Sister Tolliver!

But our own life is not less checkered than the pages we read, and winter afternoons in the library, where our souls are at ease and our minds at peace, together with warm spring days under the blossoming fruit trees, and idle mornings in June when we can sit with our backs propped against the haycocks, are but broken incidents packed into the interstices of life, or set out as contrasts to those interminable nights when, for our sins of our frailties, we woo unconsciousness in vain. The black, lagging hours glare insolently at us, asking disquieting questions about the future, pointing out the insecurities of life, sneering at our disabilities and mistakes, giving us to understand that all these are irreyarable and dolefully conjuring up a picture of a sad and dishonored old age, sans everything.

Or, again, we find ourselves stranded in the railroad station of a strange city with four hours to wait for a train. Outside a steady deluge of water cuts us off from any hope of diversion, and inside the thick, bad air and heavy smells wipe our faces like unclean towels. Perhaps at such moments the saints and the poets refuse to come at call, but one thing is certain, if we would live and be cheerful in body and healthy in mind, we must learn to bridge the gaps between our own immediate lives and those other worlds portrayed in print.

We must switch on the electric light and blind the dark hours with the glare until they vanish, and we must step out over our own destiny into other lives, whose joys and triumphs may cheer our unsuccess, and whose sorrows shall divert us from those we feel with the deepest personal poignancy. That, after all, is the main service of literature. It enlarges the boundaries of life. It gives us the freedom of other lives and other environments.

Life, after all, might be likened to a series of rooms through which we must pass, some dark and hideous, some lighted and beautiful, and literature is like the extra doors and passageways, so that when the room we are in is by way of being unbearable we can open the door and walk out into a new set of thoughts, a new decoration. And if it seem almost an impiety to use books to annihilate this world we may reflect that, despite the efforts of the monistic philosophers, this world is still a very mixed matter, and that our efforts are about equally divided always between building up and destroying, and it is vastly better to destroy some of our ugly hours than to destroy our souls by living with despondent and hopeless thoughts.

SHIPMENTS TO LEVANT.

American Exporters Would Profit by Combining Them.

The transportation charges on small shipments from the United States to Constantinople are of such great importance that Consul-General Edward H. Ozmun has recently entered into correspondence on this subpoing routes from New York to the ping routes from New ork to the Levant. Mr. Ozmun writes:

"This correspondence originated in trying to help a large firm of importers which has recently established a department for American articles, but complained that it was greatly handicapped by the heavy charges, especially when the shipment was less than a 'minimum bill of lading' on which a certain fixed charge was made. In the absence of a New York collecting house it is not impossible for them to have several 'minimum bills of lading' on the same steamer which if grouped would have them only two-thirds or even less than the freight actually paid."

"In view of this grouping of shipments and reducing the transportation charges on small shipment, this office has been in correspondence through the local agents of the Nord-Deutscher Lloyd, which has a weekly sailing from New York and transshipment for Constantinople and the Levant at Naples, with delivery to Constantinople in twenty-two days, and what has been accomplished satisfactorily for one firm can be taken advantage of by all firms having business with this country."—Consular Reports.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

There is no actor or play before the theatre-going public today so universally loved by the children, especially, as is Thomas Jefferson and his grand old romance of the Catskills, "Rip Van Winkle." The names of Jefferson and "Rip Van Winkle" are synonymous. We have laughed with them and shared the sorrows of old "Rip" many and many a time. The indications are that we will continue doing so for years to come, and our children and grandchildren will do likewise. At the Plainfield theatre Thursday, matinee and night.

"The Thief," the extraordinary drama of modern domestic life, which ran more than ten months in New York, will be presented at the, Plainfield theatre Saturday, November 27, by an excellent company which is making an extended tour under the management of Charles Frohman. When the play was first presented in New York it created a furore equal to that which it had already aroused in Paris, and its popularity seems just as great in this, its third season.

Alfred L. Dolson, press representative for Henry B. Harris' production of "The Traveling Salesman," by James Forbes, is in the city arranging with Manager H. Sanderson, of the Plainfield theatre, for the appearance here Wednesday, December 1, of this famous comedy, which has recently completed a run of four months at the Park theatre, Boston, and six months at the Gaiety theatre in New York. For his theme and central figure, Mr. Forbes has taken that great American type, the commercial traveler, and cut and dried rules for playwriting are said to have been cast aside, as he has proceeded on the belief that the thoughts of the average man, his deeds and emotion form a pretty fair basis for a play.

The hungry furnace and the coal man are a hard combination to beat, but the

is the friend of the man who takes care of the fire. The square fire-pot prevents the clogging of clinkers around the sides of the fire. That means all fire—more heat per unit of space. The square pot gives a greater surface for combustion and heat radiation and actually takes less coal for a good fire. And then there's the Boynton special flue for carrying away the dust. You don't sift ashes all over the house when you shake down the BOYNTON.

The Battle

By

Cleveland Moffett

Copyright, 1909, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

So he railed on and presently stumbled away, leaving a message that Philip could go straight to a hotter place than any bakeshop.

Gentle looked troubled. He hesitated a moment; then, as he met her brave, comprehending gaze, he decided that she could help and that now was the moment to do it. So he told her exactly what was on his mind. There was an old proneness in Philip to money love. It was a fault that had come through his father, who was—well, she knew Mr. Haggleton, did she not? Philip's mother was the finest woman Gentle had ever known, a true womanly woman. In some ways Margaret reminded him of her, and he was sure she could influence him wonderfully for good if she understood this danger. Philip was full of the noblest ideals. His soul rebelled at the unfairness of things. He was a fighter; but, alas, he could fight two ways—selfishly and unselfishly.

Gentle felt that this was a critical time in Philip's development. Had Margaret not noticed how absorbed he was in this bakeshop scheme?

"It's all Mr. Haggleton's fault," declared Margaret.

"Mr. Haggleton is the occasion," Gentle replied judiciously; "the cause is in the blood."

Margaret tried to draw from Gentle facts about Philip's mother.

"Did she realize that there was this other side to him?" she asked.

"Oh, yes, she realized it; she realized it fully. And sometimes it frightened her to think that with all her love and care she could not free Philip from this—this tendency to be like his father."

"How did she know he had it?"

"Even as a boy he was wonderfully shrewd in making bargains with other boys. I tell you, Margaret," he went on, "there is so much at stake here that—well, the selfish Philip must not win; the other Philip, his mother's son, must win."

"Oh, yes!" cried Margaret.

"And with your help he can win, but we mustn't forget that the enemy is there to be reckoned with."

"You mean his father's son?"

"Exactly," replied Gentle.

All this had prepared Margaret for a serious talk with Philip when he called that evening, but when he came she was quite disarmed by his attitude of fondness and submission. He at once admitted that he had been too much absorbed by this bakeshop affair. But now that the enterprise was fairly started he could soon leave it safely to "Mr. Jackson," and without fail he would set apart certain hours every day for the further enlightenment of Haggleton about the sufferings and miseries of the poor.

Margaret was delighted and said to herself that, after all, there would be no such trouble as Gentle had foreseen.

In furtherance of his good intentions Philip had a talk with Haggleton the next morning, Gentle being present, and they made it clear to the old man that his bakeshop activities must not take his attention from the problems of poverty.

The talk inevitably drifted right then and there into a discussion of the surroundings in which laboring men worked in general and the helpers of the combine in particular.

"They ought to have shorter hours," declared Philip, "with time for exercise and pleasure, and employers should be required by law to protect them from injury and disease."

There was a ring of conviction in his voice, and Gentle looked at Haggleton with a challenging smile. The old man understood that hostilities were declared between them and smiled back confidently. After all, this was his son, and with a little wise guidance there was no danger of his accepting any foolish sentimental standards.

"You killed Jenny's husband."

"How can employers prevent injuries and disease?" he asked.

"By creating healthful conditions of work and by using proper safety appliances," answered Gentle. "These appliances exist in all dangerous trades, but employers refuse to put them in because they cost money."

Haggleton thought a moment and then asked sharply, "Do you think there is any appliance that would keep bakers from breathing flour dust?"

"Why—er," answered Gentle, taken aback—"I don't know."

"It isn't likely, is it? And yet we've got to have bread. Besides," he added, looking at Philip, "suppose there was such an appliance and it cost $500, could we afford it?"

"Not just now," said Philip.

"Ah," laughed Haggleton, "that's the way with lots of things—we can't afford them just now. It's easy to condemn big corporations, but when you come down to it the people who do the condemning are built on the same plan. They want to do fine things, but they can't afford to—just now."

That evening in the Moran home, where Jenny was beginning to be sorely missed, Gentle produced scrap books containing facts for Haggleton's further edification. Moran was out in the streets searching for his daughter, as was his nightly custom now. Philip stood at the window. Haggleton and Gentle girded themselves for the struggle. It was for him that they were fighting.

"I'd like to show you some statements," began Gentle, opening one of the scrap books, "that bear on the subject of safety devices and the accidents caused by lack of them. You're a great railroad magnate, one of seven men who own most of the railroads in the United States."

"I have some influence in railroad matters, but"—

"Yes, you have some influence," said Gentle dryly. "Do you know how many people your railroads kill and injure every year?"

"No," answered Haggleton.

"I have the figures here," said Gentle, pointing to the scrap book, "and they show that in the year just past you and your fellow magnates killed over 10,000 persons on the railroads of the United States. You killed Jenny's husband. That's the truth, sir, Haggleton. You may ask why I dwell on railroad accidents when our problem is poverty. Because there is a terrible relation between the two. You speak contemptuously of those who have failed in life. You like to think that the million or more in this city who are in poverty are there by their own fault. I want you to know that thousands of them are there because you railway kings have failed to do your duty."

Haggleton made an angry gesture. Gentle lifted his hand.

"Let me finish. In the past year over 80,000 persons were injured by railway accidents in the United States, and most of them poor people, four-fifths of them your own employees! Think of that—80,000 crippled and maimed in one of your enterprises! There is part of your magnate handiwork. You take these workingmen into your service, these passengers into your trains, you accept their toil or their money, and then, instead of protecting them by safety appliances that are perfectly well known and in constant use abroad, you torture them in criminal wrecks, you burn them, you scald them, you tear off their hands or feet, you crush their legs or arms, you wrench their backs, you fracture their skulls. You do this to little children, to loving mothers, to young men; you do it every day of the year to over 200 of your countrymen!"

Haggleton was silent.

"Why is it that in a given number of railway employees America kills nearly three times as many as England and injures five times as many?" asked Gentle.

"America is a bigger country, with ten miles of railroad where England has one mile."

Gentle shook his head.

"I made allowances for that. I said we killed more in proportion."

"Our people are in a hurry. They insist on going fast, and that increases the danger."

"Pardon me," replied Gentle, "the fastest trains in the world are in Europe."

"You talk like a child!" retorted Haggleton. "You know nothing about conditions."

"No? I know this—that for years you magnates fought against air brakes and automatic couplers, although you knew they would save thousands of lives. Now you're fighting the system of block signals that is used everywhere in England and that would save thousands of lives more."

"We have block signals on some railroads," insisted Haggleton.

"On very few, and where you have them you don't use them half the time. Your own engineers have admitted that when forced to testify about accidents."

"If we had to run freight trains under strict block signals we'd never get our business done," snorted the old man. "Think of the freight piling up all over this country, millions and millions of dollars' worth, far beyond what the roads can handle and much of it perishable. We've promised to move it, and we've got to move it, haven't we?"

"No, sir!" flashed Philip. "Not if it means destroying lives."

"Besides," resumed Gentle, "it's not only in railroading that you slaughter people. It's the same in mining and building and manufacturing. Here's an article"—he turned to another page—"that estimates at over half a million a year our casualties in various industries largely controlled by your trusts. Half a million killed and injured every year and the greater part needlessly! How? By dangerous machinery in your factories that might be protected, by wheels and saws and flying belts that might be covered, by poisonous fumes and deadly dust that might be guarded against, by explosions in your mines that might be avoided, by falls, by fires, by insidious disease, by a hundred perils that beset your toilers, all of which might be lessened or removed, but for one thing."

"What's that?" asked Haggleton.

Gentle seemed not to hear. His kind, thoughtful eyes were fixed on Philip as if speaking to the boy's soul.

"Half a million killed and injured every year!" he went on sadly. "Nine times the total loss in the battle of Waterloo! Nearly all of them workingmen in the prime of life, wage earners whose injury means distress or ruin to a family! Think of the poor wives, the helpless children—more recruits for poverty, more tenement misery, more wrecks! And the greater part of this immense harm might be averted but for one thing."

"Yes?" said Philip eagerly. "What is that?"

Gentle looked steadily at Haggleton.

"You know what I mean?"

"No."

Then slowly and impressively the old diver spoke.

"I have studied this question. I have lived it, and I tell you, sir, you are defending a bad cause. You know that three-fourths of these accidents might be avoided and all this wretchedness and pain be spared us and this enormous waste of human energy prevented if you great captains of industry had not made up your minds that it's cheaper to kill men than to protect them."

CHAPTER XV.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

THINGS were going well with the combination—two new bakers had been taken in, business was steadily increasing and, in view of substantial profits, they were already thinking of getting a second kneading machine and widening their field of operations. But Haggleton was not having all plain sailing with Gentle, Margaret and Philip. The old diver and the girl exerted their utmost efforts to keep Philip from consenting to the development of the business further in a field that would throw men with families to support out of work. At last they succeeded.

Gentle was so pleased with the progress of things that he could not refrain from pushing his advantage, and one evening he turned the talk upon a subject where he felt himself particularly strong and Haggleton indefensibly weak—that is, the unfair division of the products of toil. What right had an employer, he asked, to keep a woman sewing carpets all day and then take half of what she earned? Suppose the woman did the work at a private house, as often happened. Then her employer charged the owner of the carpets, say, $3 a day for the woman's services and gave her a dollar and a half. That was not fair. The employer's part in this effort was too small to justify him in keeping so much of her earnings. It was the woman who did the work and breathed carpet dust and took chances of infection; the employer merely secured her the job and furnished needle and thread.

Gentle contended that this was precisely the situation between capital and labor all over the country, the capitalist taking about half of what the laborer earned, whereas a fair division could leave the rich quite rich enough and practically do away with poverty.

Was it not a monstrous injustice, he went on, that a few hundred New Yorkers should every year draw from vast unearned fortunes an income aggregating more than the total yearly earnings of a million fellow citizens born in poverty?

If Gentle had stopped here all might have been well, for Philip agreed with him thoroughly so far, but in the elation of triumph he ventured upon socialistic ground where, as Haggleton divined by a flash of intuition, the young man could not follow him. Indeed, it had long been a source of regret to the old diver that Philip would not take very seriously his dreams of a beautiful industrial republic, soon to be realized, according to him.

So presently the tables were turned, and Gentle found himself under a fire of searching questions by Haggleton. Did he believe that the present division of wealth would one day be replaced by a fairer division? Yes. By the will of the people? Yes. But how? Take the railroads. Who would own them? The people. The people would take the railroads? Yes. And pay for them? They had paid for them already, for they built them, forged the steel and hewed the timbers. H'm! Then the eleven billions or so that the railroads were valued at would never be paid to the present owners? Never!

Philip was frowning.

"Will it be the same with the land?" pursued the old man. "Will you Socialists simply take it and make no compensation to present holders?"

"Why discuss this?" objected Gentle.

"Why not discuss it?" replied Haggleton sharply. "You've had your say about our scheme of robbery. Why shouldn't I have a word about yours? Then how about the land? You'll take it, won't you, in your Socialist state, and pay for it?"

"I tell you we have paid for it over and over again."

"I know it. But will you pay for it in any other way?"

"No."

"And the great industries?"

"They will be of no use to you. Conditions will be so bad you will beg the people to take them."

"For nothing?"

"Yes."

CITY DEFEATS BOROUGH

Plainfield High School Wins Annual Game, Score Being Six to Nothing.

WITNESSED BY A BIG CROWD.

Fully One Thousand Rooters See Spectacular and Exciting Battle for Supremacy.

Plainfield High triumphed over N. P. H. S. in the annual gridiron struggle for the local interscholastic championship on Saturday afternoon in a hard fought battle on the old cricket grounds. The score was 6 to 0, and while the borough athletes went down to defeat, they made a game fight, and emerged from the fray with almost as much glory as the victors.

More than 1,000 persons witnessed the battle for supremacy. It was a typical football crowd and both schools were strongly represented by the student body and graduates, who cheered lustily at every inch of ground gained by their favorites. It was a stubborn battle, and with the exception of the period when Plainfield scored, neither goal was in danger, so evenly matched were the opposing elevens.

Conroy was the bright star for North Plainfield, while Overton and Rifferts shone brilliantly for the city eleven. The borough eleven received a serious setback right at the start when Becker, who has been nursing an injured knee since the Holy Cross game six weeks ago, was put out of business, when he was laid low in a fierce tackle by Carpenter, in the first rush directly after the kickoff.

Victory was clinched by Plainfield in the middle of the second half when Bristol made a touchdown and Phillips kicked the goal. Previous to the scoring Bristol tried for a field goal from the 30-yard mark, but he failed to shoot the ball over the goal.

Plainfield opened the game by kicking off and Becker rushed the ball to the P. H. S. twenty yard line. He was traveling at a cannon ball rate of speed when Carpenter made a grand tackle and stopped the advance. At this point Becker was carried from the field and P. Bailey called into the fray. Undaunted by this setback the borough warriors gained ten yards by some terrific line hitting.

In a series of short punts the ball went out of bounds and Plainfield gained the ball. Overton and Smith pushed through the borough lines for a gain of eight yards, but were held for downs. Conroy figured in a pretty end run, but Doane checked his advance by a superb tackle.

A fumble lost the ball for the borough team. Overton advanced five yards but another fumble gave N. P. H. S. the ball. After failing to gain any headway on an end run, P. Bailey and Townley manipulated a clever forward pass, but Bristol caught the ball, and had gained five yards before Conroy downed him. Bristol was unsuccessful in his efforts to buck the borough line and the city warriors were held for downs.

The borough team suffered the same fate and was forced to punt. The agile Riffert shot after the ball and rushed twenty-five yards, or to the center of the field. Overton and Smith made small gains but the locals were forced to kick. The ball went out of bounds and reverted to North Plainfield on the 35-yard line.

At this juncture Conroy made the first down in a neat quarterback run but Carpenter's fine tackling prevented an advance. Pefore the whistle blew Riffert and Doane completed a classy forward pass which netted a gain of 14 yards.

As in the first half the battle in the final round raged near the center of the field for the greater part of the time. Plainfield's only opportunity to score was made possible by Riffert's splendid free catch on the 40-yard line. After this play Doane gained twelve yards on a forward pass. Riffert followed with a poor forward but Bristol recovered the ball eight yards from the goal. Overton was sent through the line but he fumbled the ball, and as it rolled over the goal line Bristol fell on it, making a touchdown, while Phillips kicked the goal.

During the remainder of the game Smith and Van Zandt, of the local school, distinguished themselves by executing some clever tackles which carried the borough lads off their bearings.

HAWTHORNES DEFEATED BY PLAINFIELD TEAM

The Plainfield Association Football club scored a well-earned victory over the Elizabeth Hawthornes on the Star grounds, Elizabethport, Saturday afternoon. The final score was 7 to 1. There was a record-breaking crowd on hand to witness the contest.

The game was started at 3:30 and in a nice run down field by the visitors, Spalding took the first goal inside of three minutes. This caused the Hawthornes to stir up a bit and some nice play was seen. However, the Plainfield boys used such good judgment and combination in their play that they secured three more goals in the first half. The score at half-time was 4 to 0 in favor of Plainfield.

The supporters of the Hawthornes now took the opportunity to tell the Plainfield visitors that something would happen in the second half, as they were in for a good beating. Play being resumed, the Plainfield team again took a good hold of the game and clearly demonstrated that they were masters of the situation, by scoring three more goals.

The home team secured its only goal by a smart run down field, and although they played fine football, they could not withstand the magnificent play of the visitors. Beaume, the new centre-forward, of the Plainfield team, put up the greatest exhibition of football witnessed in Elizabeth and succeeded in scoring four goals for his mates.

Henderson also secured a goal by a nice penalty kick, Spalding and McKay also took goals, making the score at the finish, 7 to 1 in favor of Plainfield. The playing of the Plainfield forwards was like clockwork, each man just playing to suit his mate and the combination was wonderful. The half-back line and defence also played nice football and kept feeding up the forwards in grand style. The Hawthornes entertained the Plainfield team after the game in a royal manner, and the locals were well pleased with the reception accorded.

Easy Victory for First Team.

The first basketball five of the Y. M. C. A. defeated the second team on Saturday night by the score of 76 to 28. Leal School's five was scheduled but owing to injuries sustained on the gridiron by Dallis, Lawrence and Driscoll, the Lealonians were unable to muster their regular team.

HOLY CROSS ELEVEN SCORES BIG VICTORY

The Holy Cross football eleven secured a grip on the central New Jersey boy's football championship on Saturday afternoon at Finderne, when they trounced the crack Wilson Military Academy by a score of 16 to 0. The cadets have been wiping up the dust with all of the school elevens this season but in the Holy Cross combination the soldier boys bucked up against superior combination.

Holy Cross' defense line was impregnable and all of the local warriors acquitted themselves nobly, especially Russ Vail, Caulfield and Manning. For the soldier team Higgins starred.

The teams will meet in a return battle next Saturday afternoon on the cricket grounds. The Holy Cross eleven is also anxious to arrange another game with Plainfield High and negotiations are now going on in view of bringing about another contest.

WATCHUNG HUNT RIDERS ENJOY WEEKLY CHASE

The members of the Watchung Hunt Club had one of the best runs of the season, Saturday afternoon, starting from New Market pond and covering a distance of about twelve miles over the surrounding country. The going was unusually good and the day was ideal for the sport. There was only one spill and that was when Lewis E. Waring got tangled up in a wire fence and went off. He was not injured and was able to continue.

Those who rode after the hounds were Miss Gertrude Noe, Miss Fraleigh, Miss Mabel Hooley, Lewis E. Waring, C. E. S. Bellows, Rufus Finch, C. W. Fisk, Hart Farlee, Charles Wildey, Paul Dietrich, Paul Harrison, Ruppert Anderson and Chris. Cumins. Thursday morning the members will enjoy a holiday run, starting at 10:30 o'clock from the Baltusrol Golf Club. It is expected that a big crowd will be out from this city and New York.

Cranford Has Strong Girls Team.

The Cranford High School girls' basketball team, is well organized this season and is now playing a fine game. At Elizabeth on Wednesday the team defeated the strong five of the Cherry Street School by a score of 10 to 0. On December 1 the five will play the Holy Cross basketball aggregation. A game has been scheduled with P. H. S. on December 11 and one with N. P. H. S. on December 18.

SEES PASSING AWAY OF ORTHODOX JUDAISM.

A prediction that orthodox Judaism is doomed was made Friday night from the pulpit of the Temple Beth Eholim of Brooklyn by Rabbi Alexander Lyons.

"Orthodoxy," he said, "cannot stand the test of modern civilization. A Jew may come from the heart of Russia, steeped in his orthodoxy, and in a few years either he or his children will have fallen away from the faith. The orthodox congregations are steadily losing. Religion was not made for all time on Mt. Sinai. It lives and grows in the heart of man."

Rabbi Lyons is known as one of the leaders in the reform movement among the Jews of Brooklyn.

TO RESUME CANAL HEARINGS.

Senator George S. Silzer, of Middlesex county, Saturday stated that the special Senate committee appointed to conduct an inquiry into the causes for the great falling off of traffic on the Delaware and Raritan Canal, will have two hearings immediately after Thanksgiving, one in Trenton and one in New Brunswick. At these hearings the committee will subpoena as witnesses officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, who own and operate the waterway, together with canal boat owners, shippers and others in the effort to acquire information upon which an intelligent report with recommendations can be made to the next session of the Senate. Senator Silzer is chairman of the committee and his associates are Messrs. Leavitt, of Mercer, and Bradley, of Camden.

Mrs. J. A. Bridges, of Allentown, Pa., has returned after a visit with Mr. and Mrs. J. Alfred Shaw, of Codington avenue.

DUTIES ON BRITISH WARSHIPS.

"How many men are there on board that ship?" was a question recently asked of the writer; his interlocutor pointed to a first-class battleship lying at anchor in a bay in the Irish coast. "Counting everybody, officers and men, some seven hundred and fifty," was the answer. "Then what," continued this man of the inquiring turn of mind, "on earth can they find to do all day long; do they sit and twiddle their thumbs waiting for an enemy to come along with whom they can fight?"

The man who asked for this information was merely typical of other "shore-going" persons who, naturally enough, says the London Globe, consider that seven hundred and fifty men confined in a space of roughly 440 feet in length, 82 feet in breadth and 29 feet in depth, must be principally employed in falling over one another; they do, but it is in their anxiety to get on with the next job.

There, on the southern coast of Ireland, where the land stretches league long fingers into the sea, and where the sea has eaten its way in the course of countless ages deep into the heart of the land, is the calibrating range, situated at the head of one of these bays. Calibration may be shortly described as the means used by the modern naval artillerist to sight his guns, so that when the sights are fixed for a certain range and the guns are fired, the projectiles from each separate gun will strike the same identical spot; in the vernacular of "the man in the street" this "takes a bit of doing;" but, like most other things committed to the hands of the navy, it is done and done well. Also, it is one of those things which prevent much twiddling of thumbs on board.

On board a battleship the work is done when it is finished, no sooner and no later, and the great difficulty is to find sufficient time in which to do all that has to be done.

At 5 a. m. the hands were turned up, at 5:45 the great gray battleship had dragged her 13,000-pound anchor from its muddy hold, and was steaming down the bay, while yet the mists of the morning floated in pale blue wreaths over the hills, now turning from black to orange-tawny in the light of the morning sun; presently it was full daylight, cold and clear, with the promise of a lovely spring day in the air, but conditions were not exactly as could have been wished by those responsible, as half-way down the bay her forefoot was lifting perceptibly to the tilt of an oncoming swell.

Outside the wind blew keen and fresh from the west-northwest, and in from the broad Atlantic came in rhythmic succession those great rollers which may be the heralds of the coming storm or the belated battalion's of one which is past. The target, a small wooden platform, with two upright posts upon it, to which, by the four corners, was secured a scrap of red bunting some three feet by two feet was swung over the side, and from this ridiculous contraption the great ship steamed silently away. The firing was what is known as subcaliber, which means a three-pounder or six-pounder is fixed in the axle line of a twelve-inch gun (the projectile of which weighs 850 pounds) or a 9.2-inch gun (projectile, 350 pounds), and that while the actual big gun is pointed and aimed the shot which is fired is the inexpensive three-pound or six-pound one.

For all her 16,600 tons, the swell had got hold of the ship, and there was what is known as "a good deal of motion," but this had no effect upon the carrying out of the practise. Hour after hour the vessel circled around this absurd scrap like a red pocket handkerchief, which half the time was invisible between the crests of the waves, and the long, lean guns spat their tiny projectiles far across the intervening waste. Four miles to leeward the sea smoked and banged and shattered itself on the shores of this ironbound coast, for the march of the rollers stayed not at all during the spell of the sub-caliber practise. "Cease fire!" sounded, the ship headed for the target, and its possible three shillings and sixpence worth of wood and canvas was carefully picked up, but with this overture of five or six hours the day's work had begun.

There were torpedoes to be run, but orperdoes have to be picked up, and for this a steamboat is necessary and you cannot hoist out a steamboat weighing fifteen tons in a heavy swell, so the ship's head was pointed shoreward, and she steamed right to the head of the bay again before it became sufficiently smooth for the boat to be hoisted out. All the afternoon, in the comparatively smooth water within the confines of the bay, the ship ran backward and forward, while the torpedoes sped to their far distant mark, to be "fielded" by the steamboat and returned and hoisted in, the day changed to vicious squalls and pelting rain, but the only notice vouchsafed to the weather is when it actually interfers with work to be done. At 6:30 p. m., some thirteen hours after she started, the ship was at rest again with her anchor down.

Black—Carpenter.

Miss Ethel May Carpenter, of Weeks' Mills, Maine, became the bride of William N. Black, formerly of Belfast, Maine, but now of this city. The ceremony was performed yesterday afternoon by Justice Hesekiah Hand, at the latter's home on East Sixth street. Mr. and Mrs. Black will reside on Orchard place. The bridegroom is a civil engineer.

Chalmers-Detroit "30's" Won Every Event in their Class on Atlanta Speedway

During a week's racing on the new two mile Atlanta Motor Track, the Chalmers Detroit "30's", driven by Matson and Knipper, were never defeated in their class.

Think of going out day after day—the same two stock cars—and winning every race offered—from four to 100 miles.

Here is another remarkable fact: In every race which both "30's" were entered they won second place as well as first. BOTH "30's" defeated every other car of their class. They were always together neck and neck, at the finish.

Neither of them was out of commission at any time. The "30's" also won second place three times racing in the bigger car class—the only three races were entered in this class.

During the whole distance covered in all these races the "30's" averaged 60 miles an hour. A mile a minute for every minute they were running on the track.

There are no other cars in the world at any price with such records for consistency.

Members of the technical committee of the A. A. A. and Editors of the Automobile Trade Journals who keep careful records of automobile contests, both in America and Europe, are authority for the statement that the Chalmers Detroit "30's" hold the world's records for consistent performance.

Their records show that the Chalmers Detroit "30's" has won more events in proportion to the total number entered than any other car in the world.

The Chalmers Detroit "30's" sell for $1,500, and it is thoroughly proven to be the best car in the world for the price.

Our allotment is being sold fast, and we strongly advise you to investigate and place your order early.

TALK WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE

Lively Debate at Mrs. Huntington's Home, Interests Local League.

NO DECISION IS REACHED.

Miss Crystal Eastman Champions Cause and Mrs. Hugh F. Fox Makes Masterly Objection.

As to whether it would be advisable for women to vote has been a question subject to debate ever since woman conceived the idea of attempting to exercise a prerogative which man has believed to be his and his alone. Yesterday at the home of Mrs. Samuel Huntington, of Franklin street, one of the warmest debates on the subject which Plainfield has ever had, took place under the auspices of the Plainfield Equal Suffrage League. Miss Crystal Eastman, of New York, and Mrs. Hugh H. Fox, of this city, took the affirmative and negative sides respectively, but owing to the fact that there were no judges it is not yet known whether women are entitled to vote or whether their voting would increase the dignity of the polls or contrariwise.

Miss Eastman, in speaking for the affirmative side, "Resolved, that the suffrage be granted to women on the same terms as it is granted to men," gave an interesting review of her labors in social betterment work in New York, at which time she was also interested in woman's suffrage, and believed that the woman's vote was necessary for advancement in the social work.

"It is not only right for women to have the privilege to vote," said Miss Eastman, "but it is justice. It will be a big help in the home. In these days mothers cannot keep their children at home, and if they must send them out in the world, it is only natural that they should be interested in the conditions there."

Mrs. Fox, in her reply to Miss Eastman's arguments, also presented points which showed why in her opinion, women shouldn't vote. Mrs. Fox contended that there is a big confusion at the present time between politics and economics, and that women could not better conditions if they were granted the privilege of voicing their sentiments at the polls.

Mrs. Fox also argued that social and business conditions are governed by the supply and demand. She illustrated this argument by making reference to the recent panic in which thousands of laboring men were earning less money than woman servants.

There was an interested audience of women present and it was impossible to determine which of the two arguments met with the most sympathy. There is no doubt, however, that Mrs. Fox had many sympathisers with her statements of supply and demand and on the other hand Miss Eastman's arguments were received with applause. Anyway, a mere man must not be the judge—it requires a more fertile mind and one which is not illusioned.

In her rebuttal Miss Eastman, replying to Mrs. Fox, who claimed that politics and economics were a separate field, said undoubtedly they were separate fields, but government is invading the field of economics more and more with factory laws, child labor laws, etc.

If the law of supply and demand were alone consulted our children would all be working. There is a demand for cheap child labor. That is the economic fact, but government in many States says the children shall not work under a certain age.

THEY WILL DRAW 4 PER CENT.

Sewer Bonds $43,000; School House $45,000; School Furniture $10,000—All Long Term Bonds.

The Common Council held a special meeting last night to authorize the advertising for bids for a total of $98,000 worth of school and sewer bonds. This was done and Friday night, December 10, was fixed as the time when the bids will be received at the Council rooms. The bonds are to be 4 per cent. and are to be sold at not less than par.

There will be $45,000 worth of school bonds with which to erect a new primary school on Dunellen avenue, and an additional $10,000 for a furnishing fund. The first are to be sinking fund school bonds and are to run fifty years, and the furnishing bonds are to run for twenty years. The $43,000 sewer bonds are to run until 1941.

All of the members were present last night, except Mr. Montgomery, Charles C. Randolph and Frank De Witt Randolph. The meeting was a short one, less than ten minutes being required to transact the business stated in the call.

TOLLES TO CONTINUE AS CITY FATHERS' HEAD

After the special meeting of the Common Council, last night, the members held a caucus to decide on the organization of that body for 1910, and more especially to select a president to succeed President Ralph I. Tolles. The caucus was a harmonious one and it was the unanimous decision that Mr. Tolles be chosen to succeed himself for a fifth term in the chair.

The matter of selecting committees will be left entirely to Mr. Tolles and these will be announced later, probably at the first meeting of the 1910 Council on New Year's night. Mr. Tolles has been a member of the Common Council representing the First ward for fourteen years, and he has a record of which he is justly proud. He is now the dean of the body and his fellow members take pleasure in honoring him.

The rest of the organization of the Common Council will be decided later. City Clerk James T. MacMurray will continue as such, while there is no doubt but that George B. Wean, the city typist, will remain in his position. All of these details will come up later for action. The 1910 body will be as at present, although there is likely to be some changes in the makeup of the several committees.

THANKSGIVING EXERCISES

The Public Schools to Formally Observe the National Feast.

APPROPRIATE PROGRAMS MADE

In Both City and Borough Tomorrow the Pupils Will Celebrate the Time Honored Feast.

Old King Turkey will come in for a big share of eulogistic honors on the part of city and borough youths at the observance of Thanksgiving in the various schools tomorrow. In nearly all of the institutions exercises appropriate to the occasion have been arranged in which the pupils will take leading parts.

Students in the two high schools will listen to addresses. The exercises in the city school will begin at 12:25 o'clock and the speaker will be the Rev. L. R. Howard, pastor of Hope chapel. There will also be recitations and essays and a special musical program rendered by the school orchestra.

In the borough high school, the Rev. George A. Warner, rector of Holy Cross church, will be the speaker. The exercises will begin at 11:50 o'clock. The pupils will also render several Thanksgiving anthems.

At 1:30 o'clock the primary exercises will be held in the Somerset and Watchung schools. The annual contribution for the Children's Home will also be made at that time. Last year eleven barrels of food and groceries were donated, in addition to seven dollars in cash.

Pupils in the Bryant school will participate in special exercises which will begin at 9 a. m. At the Washington school there will be songs at the chapel exercises and celebrations during the day in each of the classrooms. At the Irving and Franklin schools the exercises will begin at 9 a. m., while at the Stillman grammar school, the principal, Miss Anna Day, has arranged a program which will start at 11:45 o'clock. The pupils of the Lincoln school celebrated the day in an informal manner in the various classrooms today.

Pupils in the Whittier School had their celebration today. A marked feature of the exercises was the presentation of a one-act playlet, "Pilgrims in song and story," which was cleverly enacted by the youthful thespians. The characters were as follows:

Pilgrims—Ruth Voorhees, Marion McClymont, Dorothy Stengele, Alice Thatcher, Elizabeth Leals, William Wheelan, Elton Greenleaf, Miner Trowbridge and Harold Pfifer. The part of the Indians were filled by Irving Manley and Joseph Sutton, while Elizabeth Chickering enacted the part of the Dutch Girl.

There was also an Indian drill in which the following pupils participated: Bonsall Stover, Edward Crone, Irving Manley, Joseph Sutton, Fred Van Norden, Russell Cose, Wilbur Leals, Benjamin Adelberg, Robert Becker Clinton Berrien.

President Taft's Thanksgiving proclamation was read by Randolph Stelle. "Mr. Turkey Gobbler, Sr." an entertaining story written by Randolph Stelle was read by Carlton Vail.

The musical program included the rendition of "St. George's Chapel" Whittier's "Corn Song," "My Country 'tis of Thee," and other selections by the entire school.

JERSEY CENTRAL WARS ON THE COAL THIEVES.

Detective Licklighter, of the Central Railroad's detective bureau, had another coal theif arraigned before Judge Runyon this morning who was fined three dollars. Clarence Thornton, of West Fourth street, was the culprit, and he confessed to having picked up the coal, but claimed he had not kicked it off the car.

This is the fourth case of coal thieving which has been brought before the court in the last ten days. The next thief caught will receive a heavier sentence.

Turkeys on Exhibition.

The three turkeys that are to be presented at Proctor's theatre, tomorrow afternoon, are now on exhibition at Scheurer & Co.'s store on West Front street. They are fine Jersey birds. The method of presenting these turkeys has been kept a mystery by the management of the theatre, and will be until tomorrow afternoon.

Send Xmas Box to a Missionary.

The Sunday-school of Trinity Reformed church has shipped a Christmas box of useful articles to Rev. Walter C. Roe, of Weatherford, Oklahoma, who has charge of a mission station there. There is a great variety of articles in the box for distribution among the missionary and the children at his station.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS COST HIM TEN DOLLARS

Another case of cruelty to animals came before Judge Runyon this morning in the city court, in which the complainant was Miss Van Hoesen, the Humane Society's officer. George Conover, the owner of the horse, in pleading for leniency said that he was pushed for horses and had to use the mare although he knew that the animal was unfit for the work which had to be done. Judge Runyon imposed a fine of ten dollars which was promptly paid, and it is quite likely that the horse will be allowed to recover from the sore breast with which it is suffering.

The complaint to Miss Van Hoesen was made by William Addis, a health board inspector. A. E. Carpenter, the veterinary surgeon testified as to the condition of the horse.

CO. K.'S ENTERTAINMENT; HONOR MEN GET MEDALS

Co. K had a great time last night at its armory on West Front street, for besides indulging in a spectacular and well executed drill the successful marksmen and 100 per cent. men were presented with their medals. Several speeches were made, including officers of the younger organization as well as G. A. R. men.

Past Commander S. W. Reese, Captain William Hand and Captain William C. Smith gave reminiscenses of their personal experiences during the Civil War. Commander Reese's remarks had to do with the troubles and triumphs of a private while Captains Hand and Smith interested the boys with their tales of the workings of the Commissary Department and the arduous work of the Calvary.

The honor men were as follows: Lieut. Peterson, Sergeant Hort, Corp. Winter, Dow and Niles and Privates Bindewald, Cole, Gudgeon, Horn, Welch, Dayton, Randolph, Winter, Carter and Clawson.

INNOCENT LITTLE BOY ARRESTED FOR THEFT

A supposed theft of a pocketbook on West Front street at 6:30 last evening drew a crowd to the neighborhood of Nagle's drug store, and a great hue and cry went up for the theif. A small boy was pounced upon and brought to police headquarters, but the resulting examination proved that he was innocent of any crime.

Instead of being a lost pocketbook it was the loss of a five dollar bill, which a Mrs. E. Shimer, of West Fifth street, had carelessly dropped from her hand. Someone pointed out a little fellow who was passing at the time as the one seen to pick up the money, and he was immediately brought to book on the charge of having the bill. When searched no money was found on him and he explained that he had merely stooped to pick up a peanut he had dropped.

It is supposed that the person who first accused the boy, whose name is withheld for obvious reasons, got the bill. In any event the money was not recovered.

ARRESTED SALVATIONISTS

The Elizabeth Corps Defies Mayor and are Taken Into Custody.

MADE NOISE IN THE STREETS.

Insist Upon Beating Drum at Open Air Meeting Results in Drastic Measure.

Twelve workers in the Salvation Army at Elizabeth, with drums, tambourines and the usual equipment, were marched to Elizabeth police headquarters last night and arraigned before Judge O. P. Mahon on charge of blocking the traffic and disturbing the peace. No action was taken on the charge and the same was laid over until Wednesday morning, when the army corps will be represented by counsel.

The twelve arrested on orders from Chief of Police George C. Tenney, who had been directed by Mayor Mravlag yesterday not to permit the holding of any evangelistic services in Broad street in that city, because, he claimed, the crowds that gathered obstructed the street.

The Army started out as usual last night, their parade being a preliminary to a revival they have been conducting in their new building in East Jersey street. With them was Captain Hess, leader of the Bayonne corps and known as "the fiery evangelist." The Salvationists marched down Jefferson avenue, up Elizabeth avenue and to Broad and East Jersey street, where they halted. The beat of the drum had hardly started when the three officers arrested them.

Captain John Strain, in charge of the local corps, when questioned as to why he insisted on holding an open-air meeting after being warned by the Mayor yesterday, declared to the court that he had no desire to break the law.

"I don't think it's violating the law to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ," said he.

Archibald Bull, a New York business man, and reputed millionaire, was present in behalf of the captain, and it is understood will do his best to aid him. Mr. Bull has already aided the Army in the purchase of a fine stone structure in East Jersey street.

The Mayor said he did not oppose the Army and declared that it did good work, but he thought there ought to be some limitations to its methods of evangelism.

Mr. Bull explained his connection with the case with this statement:

"I am in sympathy with any organization that is trying to lift up its fellowmen. I believe the Salvation Army is trying to lift up the fallen, and such being the case I am willing to help them in any way I can."

They both at one time lived in this city, where they have many friends. Mr. Dunn was seventy-five years old and for a number of ears had been living at East Millstone.

Mr. Dunn leaves a widow and three daughters, Mrs. Theodore Welsh, of Highland Park; Mrs. William Redfield, of Centreville, Mich., and Miss Margaret Dunn, who lived at home; also two brothers and a sister, Jeremiah, of Newark; William P., of Skelton, and Mrs. Robert Pierce, of New Market. The funeral will be held from the late home, tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

HURRY CALL FOR POLICE ON A BURGLAR SCARE.

If you happen to hear something fall in your house don't jump at the conclusion that the cellar is full of burglars. Sometimes the wire or cord with which a picture which you don't want in the parlor and which you keep suspended from a nail in the cellar breaks and the resultant crash is apt to fill you with apprehension.

This was the case last evening when police headquarters got a hurry call for assistance to capture burglars who were in a cellar on West Fifth street. When Roundsman Higgins investigated he found the picture and frame lying on the cellar floor which explained the unusual noise.

WOUNDS PROBABLY FATAL

John Enright is Stabbed Eleven Times by a Drunken Man.

IS IN A DYING CONDITION

Affray at Raritan Likely to Cost a Life—Prosecutor Reger Investigating the Case.

John Enright, a clerk employed at the Manganese Steel Safe Works, and former baseball player, is dying at his home at Raritan as a result of being stabbed eleven times in a row at the latter place early on Sunday morning. Enright was frightfully slashed about the face and on the body by a drunken man. If Enright should recover, which the physicians say is extremely improbable, several of the slashes are sure to disfigure him for life.

An effort was made to keep the affair quiet but Prosecutor Reger stated yesterday that he will conduct an investigation, and as it is a serious case, several arrests are expected to be made today. Henry MacWilliams, a brother-in-law of Thomas Flynn, of this city, and an intimate friend of Enright, is said to have witnessed the affair.

Plainfield ball fans remember Enright as the second baseman of the Safe Works team in the days when the city amateur league was in operation. In those days he was known by the sobriquet of "Spike" and was a big favorite with the fans. Enright also played semi-professional ball with Somerville, High Bridge and New Brunswick teams.

Enright entered the employ of the Safe Works about ten years ago and worked himself up to a responsible position. He has a big circle of friends in this city.

PINTO WILL APPEAR HERE IN "THE CLIMAX"

The committee in charge of the arrangements for the "Charity Ball," to be held at the Hartridge School Auditorium, on Friday night, December 31, announced today that as an extra attraction, "The Climax," with the original cast, which includes Effingham Pinto, of this city, would be presented at the Plainfield theatre that evening. The success of Mr. Pinto since his first appearance in the famous original cast of "The Climax," should insure a capacity audience at the forthcoming performance.

"The Climax" is considered one of the distinctive hits of the year, its run at Weber's and other New York theatres being remarkable. Mr. Pinto has a host of friends here who will doubtless be glad of the opportunity to see him in this play.

POLAR PROOF VERACITY

Observations of Cook and Peary not Convincing Says Noted Astronomer.

PROFESSOR JACOBY'S LECTURE.

Grace Church Men's Club Learns Much About Polar Astronomy From Columbia Professor.

Professor Jacoby, of Columbia University, who lectured at Grace church parish house last night on "Polar Astronomy," is not certain that Dr. Cook did not reach the desired goal nor that Commander Peary did, because either one of the two explorers might have arrived within twelve miles of it and not know it. In any event it is pure conjecture on the part of the critics of both men as to whom belongs the honor.

Professor Jacoby began his lecture with the statement that there might be a few persons present who had heard the pole mentioned during the past few weeks, but, he said, the north pole really belongs to the astronomer. He proceeded to illustrate the meaning of the latter statement with a glass globe, perfectly round and showed how the globe was slightly flattened at the poles. He also had duplicates of the instruments which Commander Peary took with him on his latest exploring trip.

Many in the audience who had never learned the first rudiments went away with the knowledge that no matter who had reached the pole, if either had, the honor could be easily applied for faithfulness to duty. Professor Jacoby's lecture was an illuminative one in so far as the difficulties of reaching the north pole is concerned, but aside from that it was distinctly interesting from the viewpoint of the amateur who knows nothing about the movements of the planets and who is anxious to know why only one side of the moon can be seen from the earth.

Nansen's observation of his "Farthest North," in 1895, were approved by the lecturer. Without using Cook's name he intimated that any of the observations could be written on a piece of paper that could easily be folded in size sufficiently small to be placed in the vest pocket and would not require a specially constructed box to be buried at Etah. He showed a complete set of instruments, duplicates of those taken to the far north by Commander Peary, and several others rescued from the ill-fated Greely expedition. Proofs are mere conversation as regards the attainment of the Pole, said Professor Jacoby, and as to the claims of the two explorers I believe the Pole was reached, although their observations may differ in some non-essential points.

Professor Jacoby explained with minute care the artificial horizon by which polar observations are made. Mercury freezes at a temperature of 40 degrees below zero and it is necessary to carry it in an iron receptacle which must be heated before it is exposed to the outer air. The work of the sextant with which angles for calculating the height of the sun are made, and the small compass in whch the instruments may be worked were made quite clear. The lecturer showed the pocket compass, sextant and chronometer used by General Greeley and told how after twenty years silence the chronometer had suddenly come to life when he lifted it at the museum in New York, where it had laid since its memorable recovery.

Among the other instruments exhibited were a theodolite, prismatic compass and pocket chronometer, exact duplicates of those used by Commander Peary. The theodolite is a miniature copy of the instrument used in surveying. "I have heard that Doctor Cook has written a fifty-thousand word description of his observations in an effort to prove his assertion that he had reached the Pole, but the necessary calculations, with the attendant observations described could be written on an ordinary sheet of note paper and be just as convincing," said Professor Jacoby. "Even after the proofs are ready and the explorers' story thoroughly read and understood the main reliance will be on their veracity. I believe the pole has been reached and I trust that the observations and records of both men will prove that both men have attained the goal so long sought."

After the lecture those present were given an opportunity to examine the instruments with which the lecture had been illustrated. Professor Jacoby was asked several questions which proved that partisans of both Cook and Peary were in the audience, and he answered them in a manner to convince them that he believed that both explorers are entitled to belief as to their polar achievements.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

As no serious opposition to the plans of the Piscataway Township Committee to increase the salaries of assessor and tax collector developed at the public hearing conducted at Thornton's Hotel, at New Market, on Saturday night, it is probable that the committee will adopt an ordinance fixing the salary of assessor at $550 and the stipend of tax collector at $750 at its next meeting. The increase represents a $200 raise in each case. There were about thirty citizens at the hearing, and William Winges, was the only property holder to oppose the increase.

In Justice Rogers' court at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning the suit of Max Morris vs. John Pasquale, in tort, will be tried. Former Assemblyman Von Minden will represent the plaintiff. Morris is a Plainfield peddler who has brought suit against Pasquale for $50 damages. The former claims that Pasquale's dog attacked him and bit him in the face two weeks ago.

Christmas music is being rehearsed by Holy Innocents' choir. The program will be more elaborate than ever. The choristers who are practising include the Misses Zella Kelly, Dorothy Richards, Amy Richards and Stella Reynolds, and John Richards, Maxwell Richards, Harold Noble, Fred Noble, Ronald Noble, Charles Kelly and Montgomery Carpenter.

There will be several home gatherings on Thanksgiving Day. Two all-day parties are planned at the homes of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Rogers and Mr. and Mrs. I. F. Randolph.

Edgar Shively, William Lant and George Harris have returned from a successful hunting expedition to Warren county.

Eugene Smalley, who has been ill with typhoid fever at Muhlenberg Hospital for nearly four weeks, is on the road to recovery.

Joseph Penrose and William Schwoere bagged a dozen rabbits between them at South Plainfield yesterday morning.

Miss Ethel Garretson will entertain a party of friends at her home on Thanksgiving Eve.

Marcus Foster is having a commodious porch erected to his dwelling.

PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

The second of the series of dances to be held by "The Bachelors," will be held in the hall Tuesday night of next week. The committee is making preparations to take care of a large crowd, as the success of the first dance, makes the coming dances assured successes.

It is too bad that the town cannot afford an arc light on the corner of Front street and Park avenue. The small light which has been doing service for sometime, does not give the protection to the corner that should be given to the traveling public.

The pupils and teachers of the school will have two holidays for Thanksgiving, school closing tomorrow afternoon and not reopening until Monday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Winters, of Plainfield, were the guests over Sunday of Mr. Winter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Winters, of Mountain avenue.

George H. Lyons, who has been spending several months with Lynus Walpole, of Park avenue, has returned to New York.

Mrs. James C. Lyons, of Westfield avenue, has returned from a visit with her neice, Mrs. Charles Smith, of Westfield.

Frank Corrona, of Stanbury avenue, is spending a week with relatives at Bridgeport, Conn.

James Fitzgerald has taken a position with J. L. McVoy, the plumber, of Plainfield.

SOMERVILLE AND VICINITY.

The committee appointed to secure funds for the improvements to the interior of the Peapack and Gladstone School building report the proceeds of their recent fair as $328.75. The Bedminster Township Board of Education paid $125 for one tag, and C. Ledyard Blair and Walter G. Ladd, $50 each for tags.

Mr. and Mrs. Abram Giddes, of Bound Brook, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Anna E. Giddes, to Frederick Porter, of Plainfield.

Mrs. Jane Satterthwaite and her sister, Miss Jessie Dell Lewis, of Somerville, will go to Whitehouse Saturday to give an entertainment in the Methodist church.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

Thanksgiving Day is being looked forward to by golfers the country over, for with many it marks the "last gap" in a competitive way until next spring. The East is particularly favored so far as tournaments are concerned, as attractive programs have been arranged at Lakewood and Pinehurst. Furthermore, the seniors' tournament to be held at Lakewood on Wednesday will serve as an additional attraction, and already a host of sires and grandsires have sent in their names.

It is not unlikely that a majority of the seniors will linger among the pines for the annual three-day gathering, which is scheduled to begin on Thanksgiving Day. The entire holiday will be devoted to an eighteen-hole qualifying round, contestants to classify in four sixteens, according to the merit of their scores. There will be the usual handicap on the last day.

These Lakewood tournaments began in the fall of 1895, and, as one golfer observed, it is like raking the ashes to notice the winners of the early meetings. Jasper Lynch of the home club, proved to be the first winner, and since then the spring and autumn gatherings have usually attracted some of the best amateurs from the Philadelphia, Boston and New York districts. In the spring of 1896 Herbert C. Leeds, of Myopia, won the chief trophy and in the fall of that year H. P. Toler showed the way. James T. Tyng accounted for the first cup the following spring. Those were the days when Toler and Tyng were rated among the leading amateurs in the metropolitan section, but it was shortly after this that Findlay S. Douglas and Walter J. Travis began to claim chief attention.

The Douglas-Travis period of golf has had abundant proof of its strength and lasting quality at Lakewood. In the fall of 1897 Douglas won the tournament, and he was again successful in the spring of 1898, in the fall of 1899, the spring of 1901, the fall of 1902, the spring and fall of 1908 and the spring of the present year.

Travis' first Lakewood success was recorded when he won the fall tournament of 1898, and he supplemented this achievement by winning in the spring of 1899, the fall of 1900, the fall of 1901, the spring of 1902, the spring and fall of 1903 and the fall of 1904.

Robert C. Watson, the secretary of the United States Golf Association, has also been bracketed as a Lakewood winner, his success being recorded in the spring of 1900. Both H. Chandler Egan and Walter Egan, while students at Harvard, ran down to the resort among the pines and carried away cups. Chandler won in the spring of 1904, and his cousin a year later. W. C. Fownes, Jr., of Pittsburg, appeared on the scene in the fall of 1903 and won, while A. L. White, of Boston, captured the prize the following spring. Robert Wier, of Wilmington, won in the fall of 1906, and in the spring of 1907 Fred Herreshoff, of New York, did the trick. That fall Henry W. Brown, the Philadelphia veteran, got his name inscribed on the tablet.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL ENJOYS VARIED ENTERTAINMENT

The first of the series of four entertainments that have been arranged by Superintendent George E. Hall for the pleasure of the Park Avenue Baptist church Sunday-school and their friends, was held last night and there was a large and appreciative audience.

The program included high class moving pictures by Plumb & Sampson, of New York. The character of the pictures was especially pleasing, particularly those portraying the Christmastide. A feature was the clever work of Al Baker, ventriloquist, of New York, who delighted his audience with his tricks. Several selections were rendered during the evening by the Bible School orchestra, consisting of Arthur S. Mosher, leader; Miss Marjorie Brown, Miss Arline Brown and Charles Wheeler, violins; Elmer P. Wheeler, flute; Miss Mary E. Clark, piano. The offering was received by the Misses Alice Brown, Sarah Boyd, Anna Clark, Marion Mortimer and Lillian Cuming.

Mr. Hall has arranged three more entertainments to take place on November 29, December 6 and 13, including moving pictures, with a change of program each night; also an entertainer for the amusement of the audience and selections by the school orchestra. The public is invited to enjoy these entertainments. Admission is free, with an offering received during the evening in the interest of the school. All present last night received from Mr. Hall a pocket memorandum book with the inscription, "Compliments Park Avenue Baptist Bible School, Plainfield, N. J."

Wheeland Found Dead in Bed by His Daughter.

Frank Wheeland, a Civil War veteran, was found dead in bed in the home of his daughter, Mrs. John G. Smith, at Bound Brook, yesterday. Mr. Wheeland was apparently in good health when he retired Sunday night. His daughter called him for breakfast and, receiving no response, went to his room, where she found him dead in bed.

Wheeland was 65 years old. He fought with General McClellan in the Army of the Potomac.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Thomas Jefferson in his masterly portrayal of "Rip Van Winkle" will be seen at the Plainfield theatre Thanksgiving Day, matinee and night, and will present the play in a manner said to be up to its usual high standing. Thomas Jefferson has already established himself a favorite with theatregoers of this city who now look upon him as an artist of rare ability and one well worthy the name he bears. Jefferson, a name which has stood for all that is best in theatricals for five generations.

Thomas Jefferson as "Rip Van Winkle," at Plainfield Theatre Thanksgiving Day, Matinee and Night.

In all the three acts of "The Thief," Henri Bernstein's modern drama, which Charles Frohman is now presenting on tour, there is not a dull moment nor a superfluous word. Admirers of dramatic technique find their taste gratified in this play, for Bernstein is a master of the laws of dramatic construction. He uses only six characters to tell his story, and the plot is developed logically, truthfully and most ingeniously. The show will be seen here on Saturday night.

Morrison's magnificent scenic and electric production of "Faust" will be the attraction at the Plainfield theatre Monday night, November 29. The announcement of the reappearance once again after an absence of several years of this favorite play adapted from the poem of Goethe is an event of more than passing importance.

Emma Porter as Marguerite in "Faust" at Plainfield Theatre next Monday night.

Henry B. Harris will present at the Plainfield theatre on Wednesday night, Dec. 1, the greatest comedy success in years, "The Traveling Salesman," by James Forbes, author of "The Chorus Lady." The production here will be the exact duplicate of the one that played the Gaiety theatre, New York; Park theatre, Boston, and Illinois theatre, Chicago, to crowded houses.

ELSIE FERGUSON SCORES IN "SUCH A LITTLE QUEEN"

Elsie Ferguson, appearing in "Such a Little Queen," attracted a capacity audience to the Plainfield theatre, last night. This favorite and popular actress, who is but twenty years old, leaped to fame in a remarkable brief space of time and has been one of the few really great successes of the year. She was given an ovation last night by the large and enthusiastic audience, which was delighted by her rare charm and unusual ability. The supporting company was par excellent. The management was congratulated upon securing such a fine attraction.

The story in brief of "Such a Little Queen" is that of the Queen of Herzegovina who has been compelled to flee from her own country by reason of a revolution. Accompanied by her aged prime minister, she seeks out America as a refuge. On the steamer coming to this country she becomes acquainted with a young American to whom she is attracted by his straightforward manner and brisk cordiality. Without funds and without friends she is compelled to earn her daily bread by her own labor. Through the influence of the young American she finally secures employment in a business office copying letters and doing other clerical work. She rents an inexpensive Harlem flat and her efforts at housekeeping are ludicrous in the extreme. She is followed later by the young King of Bosnia, whom also is exiled, to whom she was betrothed, and the novel idea of a king and queen working for a living as everyday Americans furnished the author with splendid opportunities for comedy pathos. In the end the queen is recalled by her subjects and again takes up her sceptre and the story ends as all stories should in a manner most interesting.

When His Memory Failed Him.

Many stories are current in legal circles regarding former Judge W. C. Wallace, one of the best-known jurists in the history of San Francisco, but here is a new one, vouched for by "Billy" Barnes, at one time district attorney, says the San Francisco Call. It runs thus:

Wallace was examining a candidate for admission to the bar. All questions had been satisfactorily answered and the lawyer-to-be had passed so brilliantly that Wallace decided to terminate the ordeal. Gazing benignly at the young man, he asked:

"What is the liability of a common carrier?"

Although lawyers the world over and from time immemorial have wrestled with this problem; though millions of words have been taken into the record of various cases in which this unanswerable question was involved, the fledgling calmly eyed the judge and at last solemnly replied:

"You honor, I must beg you to withdraw the question. I did know the answer, but unfortunately, I have forgotten."

For a minute Wallace eyed the young man; then, turning to the lawyers who were grouped around him, remarked:

"Gentlemen, this is a sad case; in fact, a calamity. The only living man who ever knew the liability of a common carrier has forgotten."

At Proctors.

The vaudeville show at Proctor's theatre this week is pronounced to be one of the best yet offered at this playhouse. There is plenty of variety and every artist is an expert in his or her line. The films d'art are better than ever and continue to improve each day, representing the very latest in the motion picture world.

FIRST BAPTISTS TO HEAR ECHOES OF CONVENTION

The meeting at the First Baptist church tomorrow night will have special interest for all who are in any way identified with Sunday-school work in general and that of New Jersey in particular. The fifty-first annual convention of the New Jersey State Sunday-school Association, which took place at East Orange last week and which was such a successful gathering in every way, will find an echo in the meeting tomorrow evening, when several of the delegates will tell the story of this splendid gathering of Sunday-school workers, as it appealed to them.

Several of the State officers are to be present, including George E. Hall, president of the New Jersey Sunday-school Association, who has been re-elected and is now serving his third year as head of the State organization.

Those who were privileged to attend any or all of the sessions of the great convention, will want to hear once more about the magnificent addresses, the helpful conferences, the delightful music, the enthusiasm and inspiration, that made the gathering such a memorable one; and those who were unable to attend any of the sessions, it is said, cannot afford to miss this convention echo meeting tomorrow night. The Wednesday evening meeting at the Park Avenue Baptist church, will be omitted and the two churches will unite in an effort to render the echo service an inspiration and an uplift to all who attend.

"ELIMINATED" EGGS.

The following episode, which will spread wherever traveling men congregate, occurred in a De Funiak Springs (Florida) hotel. It was so original and so spontaneous that for a time created quite a stir and no end of amusement and laughter, not only among the guests but the house force as well, says an exchange.

At supper time, a little late, two traveling men came into the dining-room. After being seated the usual question was put by the tall black waiter.

"How'll yer have yer aigs?"

"Medium boiled for me."

"Well, you can eliminate mine."

"One medium, one 'liminated," the waiter called to the cook.

"'Liminated? 'Limited? G'long an ax de man what he wants. We ain't got no 'liminated aigs," replied the ancient female presiding over the kitchen.

"De cook say how yer want dem aigs. She don't know what 'liminated aigs is."

"Well, you see that lady standing 'way back yonder. Ask her. She'll tell you."

To the lady the waiter went. "One er dem gemmens told me to ax yer what 'liminated aigs is, de cook don't know."

The lady's reply was not audible. Just then another traveling man came in; the two called him over to their table and put him wise. When the waiter put a glass of water before him and asked the familiar "How'll yer have yer aigs?"

"You can eliminate mine."

"Here's another man dat wants 'liminated aigs."

"G'long and ax de boss how I gwine cook them aigs. I don't know what dese men is axing fer."

The waiter then searched for the proprietor.

By that time the joke spread, curiosity was excited, and good humor became contagious. It went all over the house and into the kitchen. Not only did the house force congregate there, but some of the traveling men. The De Funiak cook has not yet found out how to cook "'liminated aigs."

PLAIN SKIRTS AND FRIVOLOUS.

Skirts have been cut in many different ways, and it is but kindly and consoling to the world of women to assure them that these variations depend more upon the cloth than on the whim of the maker.

If every fashionable artist were to thrust forth a different skirt model at will and at random, it would be difficult indeed to select with any degree of certainty. It is, however, hardly as bad as that.

While it remains perfectly true that individualism has reached a height among makers and wearers alike, qualities have something to do with cuts.

The heaviest piece of suiting you could select does not necessarily draw its outlines from a pleated model. Pleats are used in some of the lighter weights.

The gathered skirt, again, is hardly expected to appear in a boardlike cloth, but in chiffon velvet. A whole host of paniered models, differing but slightly, will be reproduced in the thinner velvets and gauzes for afternoon and evening wear, and should the little frills eventually appear on other than novelty skirts, they, too, will be of thin silks and not of the predicted brocades.

It should be a decided relief to those who were uncertain to be thus reassured. The faltering should take heart once more at a prospect of continued common sense in the cut of the cloth costume, even though frivolous outlines may overrule in the evening gown.

SMALL FORTUNES FOR ORCHIDS.

If you had quite an ordinary orchid collection you could take up one of the better bulbs that had flowered prettily and go out and buy, with the proceeds of its sale, a peachblow vase, a high-powered touring car, or a reasonable safe and some balloon, asserts a writer in Everybody's Magazine.

London auction knockdowns recently ran from 60 guineas to 280 and 340 guineas, and so on, and the highest price 875 guineas ($4,500), was not for a wild, but for a garden, hybrid, an Odontoglossum Crispum "Roger Sander." W. Thompson, of Walton Grange, Staffordshire, realized from sixty to 360 guineas for from $314 to $1,880 each for bulbs of "duplicates" in his collection.

Last year a garden hybrid Cypripedium went for the equivalent of $1,500, and a Brussels buyer paid $8,360 for a wild Cooksoniae Crispum. Count Apponyi, of Budapest, paid $5,000 to a Venezuelan for one of a species so gigantic that oxen were required to convey it and the section of tree to which it was attached.

Because a Cattelya had a violet blue corolla instead of the violet rose corolla of its species, its price leaped $250. For the Pitcianum of the H. T. Pitt collection, a small plant, the high bid was $6,000. Mr. Pitt himself paid $6,500 for the celebrated imported Persimmon Crispum. This had been bought in open market before flowering, for thirty-six cents. It is the plant that has demonstrated how it can bloom that costs dear. For the spotted Crispum "Frederic Sander," Mr. Pitt, after seeing the bloom, paid 2,000 guineas—nearly $10,000.

ENGINE TURNS TURTLE.

Fireman and Engineer Escape Injury by Jumping.

Hoboken, Nov. 23.—But for the agility of E. Dixon, engineer, and F. Segal, fireman, on engine No. 735 of the Lackawanna Road, they would have been maimed for life or killed yesterday.

The engine became derailed in the Secaucus yard and turned over. When Dixon realized the danger he shouted to the fireman to jump, and both men landed in safety on the ground. An open switch caused the engine to be derailed.

Master of the Situation.

It was the meeting of the baseball team in a New England village, and the business before it was the election of a captain for the coming season, says Youth's Companion.

Of the dozen youngsters present more than half were candidates for the post. First one and then another rose and stated the claims and qualifications of his particular favorite.

The matter was still undecided when the son of the owner of the ball field stood up. He was a small, snub-nosed lad, with a plentiful supply of freckles, but he looked about him with a decided show of dignity and confidence.

"I'm going to be captain this year," he said convincingly, "or else father's old bull is going to be turned into the field."

He was elected unanimously.

James Dowdall, of Atlantic City, fell from a pole, a distance of twenty feet, fracturing his skull, Saturday. He was taken to his home, 308 Caspian avenue.

A search has been begun for Le Roy Smith and William Rowland, who left Atlantic City in a launch Saturday and are supposed to have been lost in the bay.

Falling from a fence Sunday, Wade Yadish, six years old, of 827 Commerce street, Camden, broke his arm in two places and was cared for at Cooper Hospital.

Upsetting a cup of coffee Sunday, James Morrison, five years old, of 942 Howard street, Camden, badly scalded his right arm and was cared for at Cooper Hospital.

Mrs. William Moscatisello, thirty-seven years old, of 261A Wayne street, Jersey City, was badly burned about the face and hands Sunday while cleaning a stove in her home. She was using a cleaning preparation, which ignited and burned her. The woman was hurried to the City Hospital.

The thirty-foot launch Adolph, in which were John Hathersall, Michael Helmstreet, Jr., Benjamin Myers, Adolph Berthoize and Michael Helmstreet, all of Philadelphia, struck on the dangerous sandbar at the entrance to the inlet, Atlantic City, late Sunday afternoon. PHILIP LA TOURETTE DIES IN SOMERVILLE DEPOT.

Just as he was about to board a train, Philip La Tourette, an insurance broker, of New York, dropped dead at Somerville yesterday.

Mr. La Tourette came to Somerville from his summer home yesterday in an automobile, accompanied by his wife and driver. He stopped at the office of the United States Express Company near the Central Railroad station, to transact some business. He was taken suddenly ill and sat down on the steps leading to the express office.

Manager Porter, of the express office, and Mr. La Tourette's driver hastened for a drink of water to give him. During their absence Mr. La Tourette arose from the steps and attempted to climb into his automobile, when he fell over dead. County Physician Long and Dr. A. L. Stillwell arrived on the scene just after Mr. La Tourette had expired and pronounced his death due to heart disease.

Mr. La Tourette was president of the Copper Plant Company, of New York city, and was indentified with other industries in an official capacity. For a number of years he had lived on his large farm near North Branch during the summer and had resided in New York city during the winter. He was making arrangements to move to the city at the time of his death.

—Berlen J. Banks, of West Front street, has resigned his position with E. A. Laing, the stationer and newsdealer, and returned to his trade, that of machinist.

RAHWAY'S SLATE IS GIVING TROUBLE.

Rahway, Nov. 23.—Though several caucuses have been held by the Republicans, with the hope of making up the slate for the plums to be distributed on January 1, when the Republicans will organize and be in complete control in all departments of the city's government, and though they got together Saturday night, the slate was not by any means completed. That which occupies the most attention is the office of street commissioner, for which near a score are pressing claims. Among them are former Councilman H. Kip Woodruff, former Tax Receiver John Bernhard, former Street Commissioner Jacob Stell, Charles A. Thomas, John W. Harriman and William J. Armstrong.

Edward W. Castor will be returned as superintendent of the almshouse. The office of overseer of the poor is sought by former Overseer Henry S. Barnes, though if H. Kip Woodruff fails to land as street commissioner, he will doubtless land as overseer of the poor. John Buckley is slated for police justice to succeed Justice A. B. Cook, whose time does not expire for a year. Assemblyman A. F. Kirstein is slated for clerk and superintendent of the Water Board. Stewart B. Moffett is slated for president of the next Common Council.

It is understood several salaries will be increased by the new boards.

GIRL AND MAN ARE BITTEN BY DOGS.

W. H. Runyon, of 250 Union street, Elizabeth, was showing a hammerless gun to a friend yesterday when it acidentally discharged, a load of shot tearing the back of a hunting hound, which stood nearby. Quivering with pain the animal leaped on Runyon, its master, and before it could be dragged off bit Runyon in the hand and leg. The animal will be killed.

Ten-year-old Helen Warner, 242 Union street, Elizabeth, was bitten by a little dog which she was petting. An ugly wound was inflicted on her face. The animal was examined by Dr. F. A. Zucker, who found it free from rabies.

SETS ASIDE 239 BALLOTS.

County Board Having Slow Work in Recount.

The County Board of Elections, in recounting the Fourth ward of New Brunswick yesterday, in a contest over the aldermanship, set aside for the court to pass upon 239 ballots out of a total of 460 ballots. The county board was unable to agree upon these ballots, most of which were objected to for the same reason.

Only one of the two boxes of the ward were counted yesterday and both sides claim that they have an advantage. The Republicans are trying to overcome a majority of two which the official count gave to William Goodwin, Democrat. Already, they claim, if all of the disputed ballots on both sides are counted they have gained three through the recount. The Democratis claim a gain of two for Goodwin.

Upon the result of the recount depends the political complexion of the next Common Council.

LEAVES PULPIT FOR STAGE.

Rev. W. Sproat Not Sure He Was Called to Ministry.

Trenton, Nov. 23.—Word has been received here that the Rev. J. Wellington Sproat, who left Trenton about four years ago to become the rector of an Episcopal church in Jonesboro, Ark., has abandoned the pulpit for the stage and is starring with a road company in "Our New Minister." He takes the part of a clergyman with advanced ideas about morality and religion.

In defense of his move he says: "Several reasons prompted me to take this rather unusual step. In the first place I was never quite sure that I had a real divine call to the ministry. Furthermore, I wanted a wider field for expression. The theatrical profession, like the ministry, law and medicine, has the good as well as the bad in it."

WILLIAMS IS DENOUNCED.

Fraternal Organizations Will Ask Government Probe.

Commissioner of Immigration Williams has aroused the ire of Jewish lodgemen in the East through his alleged discrimination of the penniless alien. At a meeting of Elizabeth Star Lodge, Independent Order Brith Sholem of Adelphi, Sunday, Philip Herman, of Philadelphia, representing 167 lodges of the order, denounced Williams. He also explained the movement now on foot among the Jewish fraternal organizations to have the government look into Williams' case.

At a meeting to be held in Philadelphia it is planned to combine these organizations in a concerted attack on Williams.

Begin New Plant.

Perth Amboy, Nov. 23.—Excavating for the new terra cotta plant of the Federal Terra Cotta Company was begun upon their property near Maurer yesterday. Craven & Co., of New York, have the contract. They will have a steam shovel on the ground today.

He Meant Well.

She—I dislike flattery, you know.
He—But—er—it's impossible to speak to you without flattery.

The Battle

By Cleveland Moffett

Copyright, 1909, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

"And if by any chance we don't beg you to take them—then you'll take them anyway?"

"Yes."

"Do you call that fair?" asked the old man, turning abruptly to Philip.

"No," said the latter, "I don't."

* * * * * * *

Philip said he was going out. He had an engagement with Margaret, and on his way to the boarding house he turned over in his mind what he should say to her. It had suddenly become clear to him that he could not trust Gentle's judgment beyond a certain point; also that Margaret's position about the bakeshops had been too strongly taken for it to have been original with her.

Margaret greeted her lover with happy animation.

"Tell me, did Gentle talk to you about those bakeshops?" asked Philip.

"Why—er"—

"Did he?"

"Yes," answered Margaret, "but—how strange you are!"

Philip brightened as his eyes rested on her. She was deliciously charming. He led her to the queer old lounge with its red rose pattern, and there they faced each other, half smiling, half serious.

But the growing difference that had sprung up between them insisted upon obtruding itself.

"Why were you so serious when you came in?" Margaret asked.

"We have made a mistake, dear, in one thing," he said, "and I—I know you'll be sensible about it."

"You mean about the plan to take more bakeshops into the combination?"

"Yes."

"You're not going to do it?"

"Listen, Margaret," he reasoned; "if we don't take them in they will form

"What I decide is the thing that shall be."

a combination against us. That is certain. So the same number of bakers will be discharged either way, and if we force them to oppose us we shall suffer serious loss in our business."

Margaret did not see. She had counted on Philip's influence against this cruel combination, and now he was thinking only of the money.

"But, Margaret," he insisted, "we must have money, and surely you want me to think about the future."

"Not if it means harming poor people."

Philip frowned.

"The men discharged will soon find other work. Besides, think of the good we are doing. We're working a regular revolution in breadmaking. You may say what you please about Mr. Jackson, but"—

"I hate him!" interrupted Margaret.

"Anyway he has changed these bakeshops so you would scarcely know them. He insists on absolute cleanliness—floors and walls must be scrubbed every day, windows must be kept open for proper ventilation, defective plumbing must be repaired, no sick man may be employed. It's a good thing. It may save hundreds of lives."

Margaret listened unconvinced.

"Don't do it, Philip," she begged. "Don't go into this new combination. Leave things as they are."

"But I explained that"—

"I know, only—Phil, you won't refuse me this—the first favor I have asked you?"

Philip hesitated.

"See here, Margaret, when a man and woman marry there are certain things that each one knows about, aren't there? A woman knows about the home and a man knows about business. And each must respect the other's judgment in those matters. Isn't that true?"

"Ye-es."

"Now, I'm the wage earner," he went on quickly. "I provide the money, and you must leave money matters to me."

Perhaps this was a decisive moment in Philip's life, the turning point where a last effort of hers might keep him right

"I don't agree with you," she said. "I think a wife should know about her husband's work so that she can advise him and help him."

"The man must decide about business, and the woman must not interfere."

"Then," she murmured—"then you are not the Philip I thought you were."

"I'm sorry," he said.

"Philip," she said with a sudden dignity, "I ask you once more not to do this thing."

"And—and if I refuse it?" he asked unsteadily.

"You won't refuse—you can't refuse," she pleaded. And then, as she saw his face still cold, "If you should refuse, then—then, Phil, I should say that—that you had changed somehow and were not the noble, high minded man to whom I gave my love."

Philip's lips tightened.

"Margaret," he said in a low tone, "we seem to have made something serious out of a little thing. But, since we have done it, let me say this: I love you with all my heart. I have asked you to be my wife. I will work for you gladly and do everything in my power to make you happy, but you may as well understand now, once for all, that as a man I claim the right of deciding what shall be done at important moments. I may make mistakes, although I shall try to decide wisely; but, whether I make mistakes or not, what I decide is the thing that shall be."

CHAPTER XVI.

MORAN FINDS JENNY.

THE Moran apartment had undergone still another change. It was an office now, brilliantly lighted, for Haggleton's suggestion that the two windows facing the East river should be joined into one large observation window had been carried out. Jenny's little room had been turned into a "private office." The hall door had been removed to make place for one of ground glass, on which was painted in large black letters, "East Side Associated Bakeshops." The flat across the hall had been rented for living purposes.

Joe Caffrey had learned typewriting with gratifying celerity and turned out to be a most satisfactory speller. Moran alone remained unreconciled, watching with growing hostility the phenomenal rise of this man Jackson.

Jenny's disappearance had been a terrible blow to Moran. He had no delusion about the life to which she had returned and in his unreasoning bostility to society ascribed this, too, to the curse of capitalism. Philip, too, worried a great deal over Jenny.

* * * * * * *

One afternoon Moran, simply but neatly dressed, was working at his desk and grumbling at his work, as was his wont. Joe, seated at the typewriter, was ticking out letters.

"Say, Moran," he observed, "what's the use of being a kicker?"

"I'd rather be a kicker than a quitter," was the significant answer.

"Meaning me?"

"Yes, you. You used to call yourself a Socialist. Yah!"

"That was when I was broke. I wanted to divide. Now I've got something, and, say—no dividing for me!

"Hello," Joe exclaimed as he glanced at the morning paper, "here is my old friend Haggleton again! His yacht has passed Gibraltar."

"Curse him!" growled Moran. "I hate him!"

"Ah, shut off the hot air! What has John J. ever done to you?"

Moran wheeled around.

"What has he done to me?" he snarled. "He ruined my little business out west and made me a common laborer. He killed my wife in his rotten tenement with consumption, he killed Jenny's husband with his railroads, and he has sent Jenny out into the"—

"You make me tired, Moran. If a man has the colic in this tenement they blame it on Haggleton."

Haggleton entered, followed by Gentle.

The head of the east side bakery trust sat down at his desk, saying to Gentle:

"I will be with you in a moment. Go into the private office."

True to his resolution, the old diver now kept in daily touch with Haggleton and his son. The millionaire understood his motive perfectly, but never betrayed the slightest impatience or irritation.

Haggleton glanced at the morning paper.

"Hello," he said, "another model tenement fails to pay expenses! Tenants store their coal in the porcelain bathtubs. Here, Joe, show that to Mr. Gentle. No; wait. I'll do it myself."

He disappeared.

Moran closed his ledger, opened one of the drawers of his desk and took from it a revolver. Joe, looking over his shoulder, was taken aback.

"What have you got that gun for?" persisted Joe.

"Nothing."

Moran put the pistol back into the drawer.

"You have been playing with that gun for years, Moran," said Joe. "What's the use? You would never dare to use it. You are a milk and water anarchist. Why don't you get a bunch of firecrackers? They make more noise for less money."

"I am a fool," Moran announced gloomily. "I had no business to take this job."

"Well, then, why did you take it?"

"I was out of work. I wanted to help Jenny. Never mind what she has been. She is my daughter. She's all I have got, and now she's gone. I have lost her."

Two tears rolled slowly down his flabby cheeks.

GREAT BOOK CONTEST

$365 PIANO FREE

RE-ARRANGE THE BOOKS TO FORM NAME OF FAMOUS PIANO

Arrange the Books on line 1—2 above to form piano name. The word Piano is formed also by the books.

OVER $13,500 WORTH OF ADDITIONAL PRIZES

No Charge of Any Kind to Enter. You Have the Same Opportunity as Anyone Else to Win

We have never known a more interesting contest or one which offered such valuable prizes absolutely free. This combines the fascination of the cut-up puzzle and the skill of arranging the books so as to form the name of a famous piano. The grand free distribution of over $13,865 worth of prizes is of vital interest to any home without a piano.. Be sure and try.

Cut out the books and paste them standing up on line 1—2 so as to form a famous piano name, a familiar name to all, one of the oldest and best known in the musical world. The word piano is also formed by the books and is to be put after the name, thus————PIANO. The most artistic correct answer will be given the $365 Piano absolutely free. Next best correct answers prize certificates as stated below.

Everyone has an equal opportunity. You may get the piano or a high certificate as well as any one else. If you care for music and want a piano, this is the greatest opportunity you will ever have. This contest was especially prepared for pianoless homes, and it will be the means of our distributing hundreds of pianos. We are placing this large advertising sum ($13,865) directly among piano buyers, where it will do the most good. Instead of spending it in expensive magazine advertising, we want piano buyers to earn the piano or the prize certificate by their skill. There is no catch or chance. Read the simple conditions. Send your answer in early. Start on it to-night.

THE PRIZES First prize—A fine new piano valued at $365. Second prize—A certificate of credit for $125. Third prize—A certificate of credit for $150. The next six best answers will be given a credit certificate for $100. Following these in groups of six or more, each contestant sending in the next best answer will be given a credit certificate for $1 less than those previous—that is, six at $99, next six of $98, etc.—until the amount has been awarded.

Special advertising appropriation. In addition to the above prizes, the company will voluntarily issue to each of the remaining contestants a special certificate of credit of $85 as an award for their effort in this contest.

These certificates are good on the purchase of any new Hallet and Davis, Conway or Kimball piano or player piano in our warerooms at regular retail price. Time of certificate is limited. Certificates cannot be applied on any purchase made previous to Nov. 26th. Only one certificate may be applied on the purchase of one piano.

THE JUDGING Disinterested judges will be chosen who will select the winner, and the decision of the judges will be final. All prize winners will be notified. Judges' names will be announced.

SIMPLE DIRECTIONS Carefully cut out the various sized books now on the shelf above the book rack, then arrange and paste them standing up in the book rack so that the letters will form the name of a famous piano, one of the oldest and best makes. The word—piano—is also formed by the books and is to be put after the name, thus————PIANO. The books without letters are for spaces to put between the words. Paste books on line 1—2, and send in the whole book rack. Free to anyone except employees of the Hallet and Davis Piano Co. Only one answer allowed from one family. Send in coupon or exact written copy with your answer, as no answer will be accepted unless this is done. The most artistic correct answer will be awarded first prize, others in accordance to their worth.

In case the judges find two or more answers of equal merit, duplicates of the prize offered will be given to each. All answers must be in before 5 P. M., Nov. 26th, 1909. Copies of this advertisement will be furnished free on application at this office.

CAMPBELL'S BREAK EVEN WITH NEWARK

Johnny Campbell's Watchung bowling combination of this city broke even in their two contests in the New Jersey National tourney on the Tuxedo alleys at Newark, last night. In the first game with the Siowas the local pin knights had a little attack of stage fright and the best they could do was to register an 883 total to the Siowas' 924. Radin and Campbell executed the best individual work in this game, the former hitting the pins for 204 while Captain Campbell was only one pin behind.

In the clash with the Elizabeth Stars the locals made a better showing and downed the county seaters by the score of 923 to 919, or by a margin of four pins. It was a hard battle as the closeness of the score indicates and neither team could boast of victory until the last ball went down the alley. Mathews excelled in this contest for the locals with a mark of 204. The scores:

THANKSGIVING IS HERE

City and Borough School Children Observe the Festal Occasion.

ELABORATE CELEBRATIONS.

Rev. L. R. Howard and Rev. George A Warner Make Addresses To High School Pupils.

Thanksgiving's advent was heralded by song and story by hundreds of pupils in city and borough schools today. In nearly all of the institutions elaborate programs marked the exercises of the approaching holiday, while in some of the schools, celebrations were conducted in the classrooms under the direction of teachers. At the conclusion of the celebrations all of the schools closed their doors to reopen again next Monday.

A marked feature of the observance at the city high school was the presentation of a program which consisted of poems, stories and declamations, which were representative of the literary genius of the pupils. This part of the program included the following selections:

Poem, "Thanksgiving," by Miss Elsie Bird; story, "Thanksgiving at Dr. Birnbaum's," Miss Ouida Hetfield; "The Turkey's Thanksgiving Spirit," by Wilbur Tovell; poem, "The Tale of the Pumpkin," Miss Helen Pierce; story, "That Turkey," Sewall Ulrich; story, "Alphonse Le Despote, Miss Kathryn Sminck; a comopsite, "A Dictionary Dissertation," by Alfred Clark; "The Modern Pilgrims, as written by Miss Katherine Moynihan, was recited by Miss Kathleen Phillips.

Rev. L. R. Howard, pastor of Hope Chapel, made an address to the pupils, in which he referred to old fashioned celebrations in the early days of New England. A number of anthems were rendered by the school. The musical program also included a solo by Clyde Doane.

Bryant School.

An attractive program was presented by the pupils at Bryant school this morning. The singing was spirited and the recitations and declamations were cleverly rendered.

"November and the sad little maids," was an interesting tale of Thanksgiving. Participating in this dialogue were Margaret Hanson, Marguerite Johnson, Florence Brick, Helen Wooton, Helen Sanfilippo, Beatrice Waters, Helen Scribner, Jennie Peacock, Elsie Dayton, Elsie Townley, May Martone, Nannie Brinkley, Maud Edell, Marie Walsh and Jennie Dayton.

"Facts about the turkey" were presented by Irving Wilsie, Margaret Dealing, Harold Seal, Hazel Todd and Ethel Dendell. "The Martyr of St. Turkey" was told by Dorothey Crane, Mildred Clark, Elizabeth Moyer, Charlotte Taylor and Helen Edwards.

Isabel Harvey read a story entitled "The Wild Turkey" and Thanksgiving recitations were given by Arthur Dayton and Daniel Clarke. In addition to the rendition of patriotic songs Charlotte Verscheur rendered several violin selections. The exercises concluded with a salute to the Stars and Stripes by the entire school.

Irving School.

Under the direction of Miss Genevieve Petrie, principal, an interesting program was rendered at the Irving School, consisting of recitations and appropriate musical selections. Recitations were given by Alice Kelly, Marion Stine, Constance Durrant and Elizabeth Lawson.

The Thanksgiving Proclamation was read by Florence Boulter; "Thanksgiving Pop Corn" was the title of a song given by Madeline Davis, Jessie Ross, Elsie Leighs, Eleanor Blake, Theodore Seals and Kenneth Spratt. There was a violin solo rendered by Albert Rowe and a Thanksgiving exercise given by the pupils of Fifth Grade B. Helen Able also recited.

Stillman Grammar School.

Appropriate exercises were held in the Stillman Grammar School. A most interesting part of the program was the portrayal of scenes of "The Courtship of Miles Standish," which were presented by Elston Hoagland, taking the part of Standish; Murdock Hetfield, as John Alden, while Jennie Peacock characterized Priscilla. There were two scenes in the presentation, the home of Miles Standish, and the home of Priscilla.

Piano selections from the opera of Martha were rendered in an exquisite manner by Justin Barker. Margaret Tubbs also rendered a solo, "Come ye thankful, people come." Carter Goodrich also read an essay on Early Thanksgivings.

Borough Schools.

Appropriate exercises also marked the celebrations in the borough schools. At the high school anthems

DEMOCRATS TO CONSIDER NEWSPAPER PROPOSITION

Prominent Plainfield Democrats will hold a meeting here tonight to consider a proposition submitted by The Elizabeth Evening Times to give the party representation in this city. The Times has offered to print a page of Plainfield news every day, including a generous assortment of political talk of the Democratic persuasion, in return for an effort on the part of the local Democrats to boost the circulation of the newspaper.

Invitations have been issued to Democrats to be present at the meeting tonight, when Editor William Russell, of the Times, will explain the proposition. It is expected that a decision will be reached at that time. Among those who are interested in the plan is Frank Shattle, of this city.

WAR AGAINST CIGARETTES

Middlesex County Authorities Will Stop Sale of "Coffin Tacks" to Boys.

BETTER CONDITIONS HERE.

Campaign on at Dunellen and New Market—Grand Jury Will Act at Next Session.

War has been declared on the cigarette by Middlesex County authorities. Storekeepers at Dunellen are considerably exercised over the presence in that borough during the past few days of a detective from New Brunswick, who was engaged in collecting evidence which will be used in an effort to prosecute storekeepers who have been in the habit of selling the "coffin tacks" indiscrminately to minors.

While stationed at Dunellen and New Market the detective it is said, secured the names of a number of youths who experienced no trouble in purchasing cigarettes. These boys, it is said, will appear before the grand jury next week.

The task of collecting evidence was conducted quietly, not only at Dunellen and New Market, but in other sections of the county. It is the general impression that the movement to enforce the law is backed up strongly by the Middlesex County W. C. T. U. and also the county educational authorities.

A member of the Dunellen school board admitted yesterday to a Daily Press reporter that a campaign is on to stop the sale of cigarettes to schoolboys, and that the school authorities are assisting in the fight. He said that the cigarette smoking evil was one of the worst with which the teachers had to contend, and that there was absolutely no trouble in picking out the children who were slaves to the habit. Almost without exception they were the boys who were stupid in their studies.

Inquiry at the city and borough schools as to local conditions today made it plain that the law here is generally observed by storekeepers, although they are a few scattering violations now and then.

Dr. Henry M. Maxson, superintendent of the city schools, in speaking of the Middlesex crusade, admitted that many boys smoked cigarettes but the law in this city was fairly well adhered to. He said whenever a case came to his knowledge that a minor was purchasing cigarettes, he has secured the names of the sellers and issued warnngs to them. This course, he said, had always been effective against the further sale of cigarettes to the boys involved.

Superintendent Henry C. Krebs of the borough schools, declared there was little abuse of the law in that municipality. He admitted that occasionally violations had come under his notice, but conditions were generally good. Mr. Krebs also said that the Somerville authorities have instigated an anti-cigarette war, and that it was not unlikely that all schools in the county, would follow the example sooner or later.

COLORED HIGHWAYMAN USED WHEEL IN THE GETAWAY.

While returning to her home at 449 West Fifth street at about 6 o'clock last night, Miss DeKlyn was accosted by a "tall colored man" and robbed of the black hand-bag which she was carrying. The bag contained a small amount of money.

The highwayman seized the bag when he met Miss DeKlyn near the railroad bridge on Central avenue. According to the woman's story, she narrowly escaped being run down by the man as he rode out of an alley on a bicycle. Seeing her, he stopped and approaching her, seized the bag, and jumping on his wheel rode rapidly away. Miss DeKlyn was too frightened to scream and can give no description of the man aside from the fact that he was tall and slightly built. She went to a nearby house and told of the hold-up and the police were notified by telephone. No arrest has been made. There was less than a dollar in the bag.

Jaunt for Y. M. C. A. Boys.

The second "hike" of the season for the members of the Boy's Department and their friends will be held Thanksgiving morning. The boys will meet at the building and leave promptly at nine o'clock for a cross country tramp. A level spot will be chosen along the line where the boys will be led in a few games by Mr. Charles Line. The Association's yells and the new "Service Song" will be rehearsed and following the walk they will take a dip in the plunge and be ready for a big dinner at the different homes.

—Neuman Brothers' store will be closed all day tomorrow, Thanksgiving Day.

SERVICES OF TOMORROW

Observance of Thanksgiving in Churches and Schedule of Sports.

MEMORIAL MASS TO BE SAID.

Hunt Club Run, Soccor Football Contests, Basketball and a Shooting Match.

The merchants of the city will close for the entire day, according to custom, and The Daily Press will not be issued. There will be numerous private dinner parties and in many instances family reunions will be the order.

There will be a union service of several churches at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church at 10:30 o'clock in the morning, when Rev. Dr. C. S. Kemble, of the Monroe Avenue M. E. church, will preach the sermon. Other ministers will take part in this service.

The usual services will be held in the Episcopal and Catholic churches. At Grace church there will be morning prayer with sermon by the rector, Rev. E. Vicars Stevenson, at 10:30 o'clock. At St. Stephen's church, there will be holy communion at 7:30, and morning prayer with sermon by the rector, Rev. Morgan Ashley, at 9:30 o'clock. There will be holy communion at the Church of the Holy Cross at 7:30 o'clock, and at 10 o'clock morning prayer with sermon by the rector, Rev. George A. Warner.

Thanksgiving celebrations in St. Mary's church will begin at 6:30 a. m., when mass will be celebrated by the Rev. Vincent Sciolla.

The pupils of St. Mary's parochial schools will assemble in the church at 8 o'clock for religious exercises in keeping with the spirit of the day. A Mass of Thanks will be celebrated by the Rev. Daniel F. Hogan during which the children will render hymns of praise and thanksgiving. The music of the mass will be rendered by the Junior choir and the Rev. Bernard M. Bogan will follow with a short sermon befitting the occasion.

A mass in memorial for the dead members of Watchung Council, Knights of Columbus, will be celebrated at 9 o'clock. Father Bogan will be the celebrant, assisted by Father Hogan, as deacon, and Father Sciolla, as sub deacon.

The solemn chant will be conducted under the direction of Miss Mary A. Smith, the church organist, while the rendition of the vocal parts will be made by a selected choir from Watchung Council.

The deceased members of Watchung Council for whom the solemn requiem is celebrated are Lawrence Doyle, Michael Owens, Edward A. Flynn, Joseph A. Barry, John W. Doyle, John H. Conroy, James T. Hibbits, William J. Doyle, Alexander Flynn, James A. Saverd and John P. Powers.

In the way of amusements there will be an abundance of good things. At the Plainfield theatre, Thomas Jefferson and his fine company will give a superb performance of the ever-popular "Rip anWinkle," afternoon and night. Proctor & Sanderson had some difficulty in securing this strong attraction for a holiday, but feel that the effort is worth while for crowded houses are expected. At Proctor's theatre, there will be the usual good bill of vaudeville and films d'art, running continuously from 11 o'clock in the morning to 11 o'clock at night.

The Y. M. C. A. has secured a strong attraction in Miss Lillian Lawson, who will give a reading of "The Lion and the Mouse," in the auditorium, tomorrow night at 8 o'clock. There will be other entertainment at the association during the day, and the Y. W. C. A. has also provided for entertaining its members and friends.

The active season will close at the Plainfield Country club tomorrow, with a cross-country golf tournament. Maryland dinners will be served at the clubhouse in the evening.

The members of the Watchung Hunt club have scheduled a chase after the hounds, starting at 10 o'clock from the Baltusrol Golf club and ending at the hunt club, where dinner will be served.

The postoffice will observe the usual holiday hours, and the circulating department of the Public Library will be closed as usual. The reading room will be open from 2 to 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

Three football contests are on the taps. In the morning, on Hope Common, Plainfield High will clash with the Bound Brook High School's

P.H.S. HAS ANOTHER FRAT.

Mu Sigma Boys Rival Rival Delta Phi and "Black Handers."

THEY HOLD "BIG FEEDS."

Principal Best Ignores Two New School Greek Letter Clubs, Despite Recent Agitations.

O tempora, O mores! There's another Greek letter fraternity at the Plainfield High School. And a second organization, known in its embryonic state as "The Black Hand," may soon select a more classic name and its members appear at school with calabastic signs of pin and hat.

But the "Black Handers" are said to be mostly freshmen and current Hellenic laurels must go to the Mu Sigmas, who have already selected their pins. Even its members don't recognize it by that name, because the Greek lexicon didn't give the pronunciation of the two mystic letters selected by the organizers as "the most frat-looking" in the alphabet.

The boys call themselves "The Wing-Wang's"—a term derived directly from the original Greek—and there are about twenty-five of them. Among them are several who were most envious of the Sigma Delta Phi boys, when they appeared at school about two years ago with the white hats and Greek bill-board hat bands. The Wing-Wang's organized nearly a month ago and the roll includes prominent members of the senior and junior classes. It has as yet not been active as an organization in school politics.

When Sigma Delta Phi organized, Principal Ira W. Travell brought the matter of school fraternities before the members of the Board of Education, and each and every School Father frowned on such organizations. Sigma Delta Phi still flourishes and holds regular meetings, its members say, but there are now only two undergraduate members.

Although both the "Wing-Wangs" and the "Black Handers' post notices of their meetings on the school bulletin board, and although the first-named frat looked up the letters for its badge in the school lexicon and held its organization meeting in one of the class room, Principal Lindsey Best has ignored the organization There are no by-laws or constitution, it is said, but a feature of each meeting is a "big feed." "What harm," the boys say.

WM. C. CARL'S NEXT ORGAN RECITAL.

William C. Carl will give the final Free Organ Concert of the fall series in the old First Presbyterian church, Fifth avenue and 12th street, next Monday evening, November 29, at 8:15, assisted by the full choir of the Old First.

The program will be styled after the famous Motetten Choir concerts of Leipzig in the Thomas Kirche, where Bach played. The list includes Bach's cantata, "God Goeth Up," for baritone solo and chorus, and Motets by Vittoria, Wermann, Arcadelt, Rousseau, Franck and Guilmant. DE ARMOND BURNED TO DEATH WITH GRANDSON

Butler, Mo., Nov. 24.—David Alpaugh de Armond, congressional representative of the sixth Missouri district since 1891, was burned to death with his grand son in his home here yesterday. It is believed both bodies were incinerated. The congressman's wife, aroused by her grandson's screams, fled and was found unconscious on the lawn. The congressman's son, who lived across the street, had to be forcibly restrained from trying to rescue his father and son.

De Armond was born in Butler county, Pa., March 15, 1844, and moved to Missouri when a young man. He had been a lawyer, presidential elector, circuit court judge and supreme court commissioner. He was one of the most brilliant of the U. S. congressman and a bitter foe of John Sharp Williams.

CONTEST FOR NEW MEMBERS AROUSES MUCH INTEREST.

Court Plainfield, No. 1144, Independent Order Foresters, at its meeting Friday night will initiate candidates as a result of the membership contest recently started for the months of November and December, it being understood that there would be awards in gold offered by the Court for those securing the largest number of new members. A large batch of new applicants is expected.

The Court's annual reception, entertainment and dance has been set for January 21 next and the committee says that it will far surpass all previous efforts in the entertainment line. Edward J. McCue, Fred Bream, J. E. Kelly and Louis J. Feiring, together with a large number of assistants, have the matter in charge and will report at each meeting of the Court. As considerable business of much importance will be considered during December, the membrs are urged to attend the meetings. The good and welfare committee will prepare a pleasant time for the members Friday night.

He was walking along the tracks of the railroad on his way home and did not notice an approaching train until too late to escape.

Fontana was brought to Muhlenberg Hospital about 6:30 and is now under treatment there. His injuries are not of a serious nature and he will be able to go home within a short time.

SNAKEBITE AND WHISKEY

Another Popular Theory is Smashed in Mr. Williams' "Truth About Snakes."

TUCKABACHEE CLASS LECTURE.

Only Two Varieties of Poisonous Reptiles in New Jersey—Copperhead and Rattler.

A novel entertainment was enjoyed at the Congregational church last evening under the auspices of Mr. McClymont's class of boys in the Sunday-school. The class as organized is called the Tuckabachee Class, which is from an Indian name meaning "Add one and stick together." The class had arranged for the snake expert, Allen S. Williams, of New York, to lecture. Mr. Williams showed the unreasonableness of the popular antipathy to snakes and the general fear of them, maintaining that they are clean, good natured, easily tamed and should be treated in a friendly manner. There are only two kinds in New Jersey that are venomous; the copperhead and the rattlesnake. Both are slow moving snakes and not disposed to attack. Both have flattened arrow-shaped heads.

The rattlesnake is known by its rattle, the copperhead by its copper-color and saddle-shaped markings. Some other kinds of the larger snakes can bite in a feeble sort of a way, but their bites have no venom and are not as dangerous as the scratch of a cat. If one is bitten by a snake there will appear two red spots if the bite is from a venomous snake.

Mr. Williams declared that the popular remedy for shakebite, whiskey, is wholly useless. The proper course to pursue if bitten by a poisonous snake is to prevent the flow of poisoned blood to the heart by making a ligature bound as closely as possible about the bitten member; then suck out the blood; making slits with a penknife by the wound will make this more effective; then as quickly rub permanganate of potash into the wound.

After showing many stereopticon views, Mr. Williams produced seven or eight living snakes from bags and exhibited them to the audience. Selecting a seven-year-old boy, who seemed to have a readiness for the experiment he gave him one snake after another to handle and place about his neck and then put back into the bag. The lad showed no fear and boy and snakes in combination afforded the audience much amusement. Some of the snakes were four or five feet in length and very prettily marked.

The proceeds of the entertainment are to be used for Thanksgiving dinners for the poor.

SHOOTING SQUIRRELS SHOOTS HIMSELF.

It was a curious accident that happened to Marcus Waldron, of Carlton avenue, the fifteen-year-old sportsman who shot himself in the foot on Monday. Young Waldron had been hunting squirrel and having shot one, wounding it, he started a fire of leaves at the entrance of a hole in the tree in which the little animal had taken refuge. Assured that the squirrel was dead Waldron stood his rifle up against the tree and stooping down attempted to pull the squirrel from the hole. As he bent down the gun, cocked for another victim, fell over and was discharged. The shots entered his foot mutilating the first and second toes of the right foot.

Young Waldron was able to mount his horse and return home after receiving "first aid" from a chum.

Funeral of W. H. Miller.

Casey and E. T. Gilfery, of the Royal Arcanum.

Christmas Treads the Heels of Thanksgiving.

For the very generous patronage the people of the State have bestowed upon us and for the bright prospects of an immensely prosperous future, for this already great business, we are heartily and sincerely thankful.

Every year the day set aside for Thanksgiving is crowded closer and closer by the hurrying, scurrying throngs of Christmas shoppers, who as their wisdom increases begin their gift buying earlier.

We equally eager to spread the buying over a longer period than has been customary have had our purchases shipped to us earlier, and the goods placed on view, as fast as they arrive, in waiting for the holiday season's formal opening.

This year we are more fully ready than in any previous season. The store is grandly stocked.

The displays are magnificent.

You won't see a finer show of gifts, other than we are showing right now.

But little remains to put the finishing touches on the display, in the many divisions of the store, and in a day or two, such decorations as the insurance authorities will permit will be in place. Then the State's Greatest Holiday Store will be completely ready.

There is no good reason why fifty per cent. of the Christmas gifts should not be bought by the tenth of December, and they will be if good judgment and common sense prevail.

EDITOR'S NEPHEW SHOOTS OFFICER.

Fox Sends Bullet Into Kramer's Mouth When Latter Attempts to Arrest Him.

Donald C. Fox, nephew of the late Colonel C. Page, who was editor of the Bayonne Herald, was arraigned before Recorder Mara at Bayonne yesterday, charged with shooting Policeman Carl Kramer, and was held without bail for the action of the grand jury.

The recorder is now editor of the Bayonne Herald, which is still controlled by the Page estate. Kramer is in the Bayonne Hospital, and it is said his chances for recovery are about even. He was shot in the mouth and the bullet lodged in the back of his neck. Fox expressed his deep regret for the shooting and said he was crazed with drink at the time.

Fox was returning from New York, where he had attended a matinee performance at the Hippodrome, when he encountered Kramer, who volunteered to go home with him. Fox resented the suggestion that he was intoxicated and Kramer declared he would have to take him to the police station. Fox drew a revolver from the pocket of his furlined overcoat and shot Kramer in the mouth. Then he turned and ran down the street. The shooting occurred at 7:30 p. m.

Myron B. Olmstead, a motorman on a Fifth avenue annex car, saw the shooting, and, leaping from the car, gave chase. He picked up Kramer's club, and overtaking Fox, struck him over the head, knocking him to the sidewalk. Fox jumped to his feet and snapped his revolver six times at Omstead. None of the cartridges were discharged. Fox ran on until he was stopped by John Nagel and a bartender, who turned him over to Chief of Police Yore.

Fox lives in Canajoharie, N. Y., and was in Bayonne on legal business. He was stopping at the home of his aunt, Mrs. Page.

THE FORUM.

Plainfield, N. J., Nov. 24, 1909.
Editor, The Daily Press:

I am sure you will allow me to make a few corrections in the report of my Sunday's sermon, as I found your account of it much confused. Your reporter was mistaken in thinking that I said I found the conditions of the Church of England "amazing!" I used no such word. I did not say or imply that there are too many "medieval" suggestions. The word is not in my sermon. Moreover, I was speaking of medieval buildings and could as reasonably have objected to Gothic in them. Instead of any allegation of "cold interiors" the sermon speaks, (I quote verbatim-, of finding in Wells cathedral "a warm, winning color tone," and of the service it says, "It is the perfection of religion as a sentiment and an afternoon service there is a thing to be thankful for as long as one lives." Your paper makes me say: "To this music there was no touch of soul, no love, and very little religious sentiment." The sermon reads: "The anthem, 'How Beautiful Are Thy Temples, O Lord of Hosts,' melts the heart of the listener like a pearl in a cup, and for days the music sounds and resounds and thrills reverberatingly in memory's corridors, as if the soul were indeed the penetralia of God's temple and memory the sacred cloister vibrant with sweet remembrances." Does that sound "cold?" Instead of saying that "the people of England are aware that the service at St. Paul's, in London, is not fulfilling its destiny," I said, "The service at St. Paul's was never so impressive as today. The clergy have been beautifying the service more and more, polishing it, as a lapidary does a precious stone, making it more brilliant and dazzling, and they appeal to the ear as well as the eye, by the best voices for intoning and singing that the kingdom affords. "Out of Zion the perfection of beauty God shines," and "the service becomes superlatively fine." I think, dear Mr. Editor, after reading these words you will admit that I have just cause for grievance. I will not burden your columns with farther corrections. With thanks for many courtesies received from you, I am

Faithfully yours,
A. C. NICKERSON.

After three days' gunning the sportsmen were preparing to return home, when their dogs broke into a storage tent and ate the entire bunch of rabbits and quail.

Henry C. Battelle, who died in Jersey City on November 2 last, and who was at one time a resident of Newark, bequeathed his estate to his sister, Mrs. Anna Clarkson. His will was admitted to probate Monday in the office of the surrogate of Hudson county. It was made on June 8, 1887. One of the executors of the estate is former Supreme Court Justice Gilbert Collins.

Married less than a year, Mrs. Lena S. Patterson made application before Vice-Chancellor Learning, in Camden, Monday, for alimony and counsel fee, pending her action for divorce from her husband, Daniel J. Patterson, on the ground of desertion. Filing an answer, Attorney Annie Star Keeler, representing the husband, alleges extreme cruelty on the part of the wife. It is alleged that Mrs. Patterson struck her husband over the head with a frying pan, stabbed him on the wrist and threatened to shoot him with a revolver. Decision was reserved.

Several diamond rings, a gold watch and other valuable jewelry disappeared from the home of Station Agent H. V. Tuft, of Wenonah, two years ago, while the family were at the seashore. The articles were supposed to have been stolen. Monday their little daughter Claire was playing with an old parasol which she found in the back yard, where it had been thrown away at a recent housecleaning. Raising the parasol all the valuables fell to the ground, not one thing missing. Now Mrs. Tuft remembers hiding the articles there for safekeeping.

At the death of his mother, when he was nine days old, Alfred Bacon Davis, now two and one-half years old, was given in possession of his grandmother, Mrs. Iantha Saltzgiver, of 912 North Eighth street, Camden, and when his father sought the custody of the little fellow in the Court of Chancery Monday he was not recognized. Mrs. Saltzgiver testified that she took charge of the child with the understanding that he was to remain with her until he was able to care for himself. Harold H. Davis, of Philadelphia, the father of the boy, declared that his son was to remain with the grandparent until he was ready to care for it. Vice-Chancellor Leaming decided to allow the father to see the boy at any time, but he will remain in charge of the grandmother.

—Winfield Wainwright, of Grandview avenue, who has held a position as clerk for J. T. Vail, of North avenue, for a long time, has taken a position as assistant time-keeper at the Pond Machine Tool Works. He enters upon his new duties Monday.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

"Rip Van Winkle," which will be seen tomorrow afternoon and night at the Plainfield theatre, is a play that never grows old. Thomas Jefferson, according to the consensus of opinion among the best critics during the last decade he has been playing the genial and jovial old vagabond of the Catskills, is such that his "Rip Van Winkle" is one of the greatest and most popular of impersonations, while more affectionate regard, aye, genuine love, is felt for "Rip Van Winkle" than for any other stage creation of recent times. It has been an enormous success from the start. Dion Boucicault's skill is in the lines and situations, and Mr. Jefferson's personality and powerful but gentle art are blended in the delineation of "Rip." The bibulous old rascal has been recommended and maintained by the comedian's masterly toning of his iniquities and graceful exposition of the tenderness and sweetness of his heart.

So many requests for the reservation of seats for the coming presentation here by Charles Frohman, of Henri Bernstein's great play, "The Thief," which will be made at the Plainfield theatre on Saturday night, November 27, that the management has decided to not only open the advance sale much earlier than is usually the case, but to make seat reservations in response to mail orders. All such orders will be filled in the order of their receipt. No play announced for the present season has aroused so much interest as the coming of "The Thief." The fact that the play ran for ten months at the Lyceum Theatre in New York, for three months at the Park theatre n Boston, and for three months at Power's theatre in Chicago, has established it as one of the really sensational successes of the last ten years. It will be played by a specially selected company and presented with exactly the same scenic equipment which was used in New York.

Morrison's "Faust," one of the standard attractions on the American stage, better, brighter and grander than ever, will once more appear at the Plainfield theatre Monday night, November 29. Few attractions have achieved the success and the staying qualities of this famous poem of the Philosopher Goethe which set to music, and also in its dramatic form bids fair like the brook to run on forever. The back bone is there, or as the writers of the present day will tell you it has the virility and the red blood in its veins that appeals to all classes. The snares of the devil, his accomplishment through "Faust" (with whom Marguerite falls in love) of Marguerite's downfall and her ultimate redemption is in dramatic form a play of absorbing interest. Love is the one grand passion that sends the blood rushing through the veins of mankind and womankind alike and brings the rich and the poor, the high and the low on the same level. "Faust" not alone tells a beautiful story in a simple way but it teaches a moral lesson also.

"The Traveling Salesman," by James Forbes, the author of "The Chorus Lady," will be seen in this city at the Plainfield theatre Wednesday night, December 1. No better comedy entertainment has ever been offered in Plainfield than this tremendous footlighting of a phase of "modern drummer life" that seems to appeal to all classes. Austin Webb, Dan Baker, Joseph Sullivan, Gideon Burton and Albert McGovern, the five jovial and mirth-provoking drummers wil display a choice line of laughs and conversational sunshine, and Rosalind Coghlan, as the ingenuous and lovable ticket agent; Eliza Mason in the role of the modern Xantippe, but with a heart as good as gold—in fact, the entire company, without exception, give splendid interpretations to Mr. Forbes' interesting stage characters. There are no slow starts in "The Traveling Salesman." It goes from the jump and the poker game is the best the stage has ever offered, and the piece is American humor rendered plausible and belongs to the character that utters them. Every indication points to a crowded house for "The Traveling Salesman" which ran for an entire season at the Gaiety theatre, New York, four months at the Park theatre, Boston, and six months at the Illinois theatre, in Chicago.

KIDNAPPED ELIZABETH GIRL BECOMES A GYPSY.

Kidnapped by gypsies more than two years ago, Amelia Johnson, 13 years old, of Elizabeth, was found by her father, after a search of many thousand miles, in Chicago, yesterday. Her father, Ephriam Johnson, a gypsy horse trader, has a camp in Elizabeth, together with his two brothers, Thomas and Lewis.

The girl was kidnapped from their camp in Virginia and, it is alleged, Zeathcho Demetro, then known as the Gypsy King, stole her, aided by his sons. The Demetros have been arrested and are now being held by the Chicago police. The girl will be brought back to Elizabeth.

The girl is a typical gypsy in appearance and unusually pretty. She has the dark, olive skin so often seen among gypsy girls and her hair, which is black and glossy, hangs in two braids over her shoulders.

Having lived with the Demetro family so long, she has acquired their accent of speech. When asked at the Harrison street station if she wanted to go back to her father, she answered:

"No, no; me no want to go home to Papa John. Me want to stay with Demetro. I have a nice time and no work—only take care of baby. I no lika Papa John. He stay too long in one place. We lika to travel. I lova the trees, the birds, the big woods, and the wagon. We go by this road and that road and at night we maka da camp. Oh, I lova da gypsy life. Me no leave Demetro. He good to me."

Demetro is locked up at police headquarters on a charge of kidnapping. His 16-year-old son, Ephriam, also is under arrest. The boy says that he is engaged to marry the girl. The child's whereabouts became known to her father through an anonymous letter received by him a few days ago. Demetro and his family arrived in Thornton, Ill., a few weeks ago and intended to camp there for the winter.

HAPPY RESULTS.

Have Made Many Plainfield Residents Enthusiastic..

No wonder score of Plainfield citizens grow enthusiastic. It is enough to make anyone happy to find relief after years of suffering. Public statements like the following are but truthful representations of the daily work done in Plainfield by Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. J. C. Manchester, 120 Lafayette place, Plainfield, N. J., says: "I was a sufferer from kidney and bladder trouble for a long time. I doctored a great deal but failed to find a cure until I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and made up my mind to give them a trial. Good results followed their use and my kidneys were soon restored to a normal condition. I believe my cure is a permanent one and I will always give Doan's Kidney Pills my endorsement when an opportunity occurs."

The Battle

By

Cleveland Moffett

Copyright, 1909, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

Joe was touched. He felt sincerely sorry, but, after the manner of his kind, ashamed of this "softness." So he replied airily:

"Jenny will turn up all right."

Despair distorted the old man's features.

"Where will she turn up?" he asked, in an agony of apprehension. "What is she doing now?"

"You've got a rank philosophy?" ejaculated Joe. "Whatever is is wrong. That's the way you dope it out. Say, you'd better get busy and mail those letters Mr. Jackson has signed or you'll lose this job you are so ashamed of."

Moran obediently put on his coat and hat, took up a pile of correspondence which Joe had meanwhile stamped with lightning rapidity and walked toward the door.

Joe returned to his typewriting.

Moran, however, having reached the door, stopped, hesitated and turned back. He approached Joe's desk, leaned over it and looked him straight in the eyes. The grim determination of his face daunted Joe a little.

"Here, you," said the old man significantly, "I want to know something, and I mean to find out. Where is Jenny?"

Joe shifted his eyes from Moran's face to the wall behind it and wriggled uneasily in his chair.

"Why—er"— he stammered.

"Answer my question," said the other man, with ominous calm.

"I don't know, Moran."

"I believe you are lying. You know where she is and what she is. Mark my words, I will find that girl! I will find her, I tell you!"

He continued to look at Joe in silence, with a new determination in his watery, wavering eyes. His flabby mouth was drawn in a tight line. Joe was startled again, but again mastered himself. He looked back boldly, steadfastly, resolved to keep to himself what he knew.

Moran's next action startled him still more. The old man took his keys out of his pocket, unlocked the drawer, took from it the revolver and slipped it into the pocket of his overcoat.

Then he left the office without a further word.

Joe got up and walked up and down. He was now deeply disturbed, far more so than he would admit even to himself. This sudden demonstration of firmness by the flabby, vacillating, mouthing Moran—well, he did not like it. No man is so dangerous, he knew, as a coward with a gun when he screws his cowardice up to the sticking point.

For whom was that revolver meant?

He cast about in his mind, but could settle on no particular person. Moran's hatreds were so all inclusive, social and economic in the aggregate rather than particular.

Of course John J. Haggleton was to Moran the incarnation of all the evils of society, including the evil whose victim Jenny was. But then John J. was away on his yacht for a three months' cruise, and Moran could not reach him with a pistol across the Atlantic ocean at Gibraltar.

There were the police and the police justices on their benches and the settlement workers, whose social superiority Moran detested. He hated the czar of Russia and the president of the republic. He did not like Jackson. He merely tolerated Gentle. He had begun to sneer at Philip and his sudden business activity. He was rude to Margaret Lawrence. Jenny alone he loved.

Perhaps he hated Joe himself. He thought of the pistol again. It might be turned against himself. Joe stopped in his walk.

He remembered what he had heard the leader of the gang he had deserted in time say upon one occasion: "When a man threatens you with a gun, shoot first, and do it quick. But if you're unarmed grab hold of his windpipe and squeeze. No man who feels the life being strangled out of him ever has presence of mind enough left to shoot. Instinct tells him to tear those hands away from his throat—to get air, to breathe. He'll drop his gun to do it before he'll fire."

Joe became calmer. He lighted a cigarette. After all, what was he thinking about? Such nonsense! He dismissed the subject from his mind.

"He's an awful bluff," he said, half aloud. "He's a wind anarchist! He couldn't blow up a red balloon!"

* * * * * * *

Moran had left the office a little before 5 in the afternoon. He stood a moment trying to decide what to do. It was no use to return to the office in his present state of mind, he concluded. Moreover, they would close in an hour. He entered a saloon and had a drink, then took another and still another with a couple of men who, he discovered, were fomenting trouble among the hands of the bakery combine.

He mechanically ate of the "free lunch" and emerged at 9 o'clock to take up his hunt for his daughter.

He walked the Bowery from Chinatown to the Bible House, back and forth. A fine drizzle was falling, but he did not feel it. He was thinking of Jenny. If he could only find her!

It was after 10 when he turned into Doyers street, where evil looking Chinamen were skulking under dark doorways. He recognized the smell of burning opium. He heard the harsh tomtom in the Chinese theater, and from the Doyers street mission just beyond came the fragment of a gospel hymn:

> O depths of mercy! Can it be
> That gate was left ajar for me?

For a moment he stood irresolute, almost ready to go in and throw himself on his knees and pray for help. If he could only find her!

He turned into a narrow street. They were making repairs here, and he sat down on the iron elbow of a sewer pipe. He sat in the rain and thought in a dull way for a long time. A woman approached.

"Feelin' blue, ain't ye? Same here," she said.

"What's the matter?"

"I'm all broke up," she said. "I'm takin' too much dope. Fifty pills a day is too much, ain't it? The missionary doctor says I can't live six months if I don't cut it out."

"Do you know Jenny Moran?"

"Jenny Moran? Sure! She ain't here. She's a good looker. She stayed down here one day. If you want to find her you must go uptown."

Moran rose. Within twenty minutes he was walking along Sixth avenue in the neighborhood of several second rate music halls. He entered one and sat down at a table.

Suddenly he heard a voice beside him exclaim "Father!" and, looking up, he saw Jenny. She wore a large black hat with white ostrich plumes and a tan coat lined with silk.

She followed him without a word, pale and trembling, into the street, across town and into a Fourth avenue car. Not a word passed between them. They sat side by side, her hand in his, the tears rolling unchecked down her cheeks, his face grim, a baleful light in his eyes.

Suddenly he heard a voice beside him exclaim "Father!"

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH HOME

THE business man should have his home connected with the telephone system. There is seldom a day when it will not be a great convenience, either for a message from him to his family, or from home to office. There are so many little emergencies, such as a friend to dinner, things needed from town, etc., which a two-minute conversation will settle.

The universal development of the Bell System enables him to talk daily with his family, whether he be at his office, or miles away in another city.

GREAT BOOK CONTEST

$365 · PIANO FREE

RE-ARRANGE THE BOOKS TO FORM NAME OF FAMOUS PIANO

SEE DIRECTIONS BELOW

Arrange the Books on line 1—2 above to form piano name. The word Piano is formed also by the books.

OVER $13,500 WORTH OF ADDITIONAL PRIZES

No Charge of Any Kind to Enter. You Have the Same Opportunity as Anyone Else to Win

We have never known a more interesting contest or one which offered such valuable prizes absolutely free. This combines the fascination of the cut-up puzzle and the skill of arranging the books so as to form the name of a famous piano. The grand free distribution of over $13,865 worth of prizes is of vital interest to any home without a piano.. Be sure and try.

Cut out the books and paste them standing up on line 1—2 so as to form a famous piano name, a familiar name to all, one of the oldest and best known in the musical world. The word piano is also formed by the books and is to be put after the name, thus————PIANO. The most artistic correct answer will be given the $365 Piano absolutely free. Next best correct answers prize certificates as stated below.

Everyone has an equal opportunity. You may get the piano or a high certificate as well as any one else. If you care for music and want a piano, this is the greatest opportunity you will ever have. This contest was especially prepared for pianoless homes, and it will be the means of our distributing hundreds of pianos. We are placing this large advertising sum ($13,865) directly among piano buyers, where it will do the most good. Instead of spending it in expensive magazine advertising, we want piano buyers to earn the piano or the prize certificate by their skill. There is no catch or chance. Read the simple conditions. Send your answer in early. Start on it to-night.

THE PRIZES First prize—A fine new piano valued at $365. Second prize—A certificate of credit for $125. Third prize—A certificate of credit for $110. The next six best answers will be given a credit certificate for $100. Following these in groups of six or more, each contestant sending in the next best answer will be given a credit certificate for $1 less than those previous—that is, six at $99, next six of $98, etc.—until the amount has been awarded.

Special advertising appropriation. In addition to the above prizes, the company will voluntarily issue to each of the remaining contestants a special certificate of credit of $85 as an award for their effort in this contest.

These certificates are good on the purchase of any new Hallet and Davis, Conway or Kimball piano or player piano in our warerooms at regular retail price. Time of certificate is limited. Certificates cannot be applied on any purchase made previous to Nov. 26th. Only one certificate may be applied on the purchase of one piano

THE JUDGING Disinterested judges will be chosen who will select the winner and the decision of the judges will be final. All prize winners will be notified. Judges' names will be announced.

SIMPLE DIRECTIONS Carefully cut out the various sized books now on the shelf above the book rack, then arrange and paste them standing up in the book rack so that the letters will form the name of a famous piano, one of the oldest and best makes. The word—piano—is also formed by the books and is to be put after the name, thus————PIANO. The books without letters are for spaces to put between the words. Paste books on line 1—2, and send in the whole book rack. Free to anyone except employees of the Hallet and Davis Piano Co. Only one answer allowed from one family. Send in coupon or exact written copy with your answer, as no answer will be accepted unless this is done. The most artistic correct answer will be awarded first prize, others in accordance to their worth.

In case the judges find two or more answers of equal merit, duplicates of the prize offered will be given to each. All answers must be in before 5 P. M., Nov. 26th, 1909. Copies of this advertisement will be furnished free on application at this office.

GAS ENGINES FOR ECONOMY

To the man who uses a power drive, economy is as important a factor as efficiency.

Gas engines are efficient. They are likewise economical.

Gas engines are economical because they are equipped with sensitive governors which regulate the running load so that no unnecessary gas is consumed and no useless energy is developed. When load is light fuel consumption is correspondingly light and expense is kept at minimum.

Gas engines are economical because they require no boilers and no engineers. Ten cents worth of gas will run a five horsepower engine, carrying a full load, for a whole hour.

Gas engines will do your work cheaply—which is the main factor—and they will keep on doing it for years—which is also an important consideration in their favor. Think it over.

PLAINFIELD ELKS DOWN CHAMPIONS ON ALLEYS

That the Plainfield Elks bowling team is sure to be a big factor in the Elks League this season was demonstrated on Campbell's alleys last night when the local won the odd game in a series with the New Brunswick quintet which won the championship last season. There was a big crowd on hand and it was quick to applaud the pinners in their sensational performances.

Plainfield started off auspiciously by taking the first combat by the score of 859 to 828. It was not until the second game that the sensational work of the evening was accomplished. In this game the champions emerged victorious by posting a score of 1,004 pins to Plainfield's 915.

The Middlesex score in that game is the highest team mark registered this season on the local alleys. Harkins and Burton excelled with respective marks of 235 and 223, while Greenwald registered an even 200.

Plainfield also shared the honors in this fancy exhibition, although the locals lost. Johnny Campbell, at anchor, did some fall smashing, and carried off the individual honors of the series by totalling 247 pins. Chauncey Stout's "circulation hook" also worked havoc to the pins and he was second high for Plainfield with a 212 mark.

In the rubber game Plainfield triumpted by the score of 960 to 871. For the locals Laing was high man with 224 and Campbell was second with a mark of 211. The scores:

Plainfield.

Kiely	190	159	188

PLAINFIELD A. F. C. TO PLAY MAPLE FIELDS HERE

The Plainfield Association Football Club and the Maple Field Club, of Jersey City, will clash on the Clinton avenue grounds, tomorrow afternon at 3 o'clock. This is likely to be one of the best football matches of the season in this city, as the visitors have not yet been defeated and the Plainfield boys have only lost one game.

Both teams are determined to put up a great fight, and although the Jersey City fellows are sure they will add another victory to their string, the Plainfielders are just as determined to be the first team to lower the colors of the Maple Fields. A record-breaking crowd is expected as the standing of the two teams is so close that it is just a toss up as to who will win, and some fine playing will be witnessed. The Plainfield team will lineup as follows:

Stevenson, goal; Hosie, right back; Craig, left back; Kenny, right half; Henderson, centre half; McComb, left half; Spalding, outside right; Brabyn, inside right; Heaume, centre; McKay, inside left; Sutton, outside left. Reserves—J. Craig, J. Jamieson, L. Gould, F. Buckland. Referee, George Gray.

GOLF.

There are signs of life at Pinehurst, N. C., and ere long golfers will congregate again for the annual fenfixtures. At the annual meeting of the Pinehurst Golf Club, held recently, the following officers were elected:

President, Leonard Tufts, Boston; secretary-treasurer, H. L. Jilson Pinehurst; governors, Allan E. Lard, Washington; Henry C. Fownes, Pittsburg; H. E. Ormsbee, Fitchburg; Joseph D. Climo, Cleveland; James McCutcheon, New York; Harry Dutton and C. L. Becker, Boston; G. W. Watts, Durham; W. L. Hurd, Pittsburg, and E. H. Stillman, Detroit. The leading Pinehurst dates arranged for the season are as follows:

November 25 to 27—Autumn tournament.

December 28 to 30—Holiday week tournament.

January 10 to 12—Midwinter tournament.

February 9 to 12—St. Valentine's tournament for men.

February 16 to 20—St. Valentine's tournament for women.

March 9 to 12—Spring tournament.

March 22 to 26—United North and South championship tournament for women.

March 30 to April 2—United North and South championship tournament for men.

April 14 to 15—Mid-April tournament.

At a recent meeting of the executive committee of the Metropolitan Golf Association the nominating committee of three to name officers for 1910 was appointed, as follows: Walter E. Hodgman, St. Andrews Golf Club; Cornelius J. Sullivan, Baltusrol Golf Club, and George E. Watson, Garden City Golf Club.

The ticket will be voted on at the annual meeting in December. The secretary has assigned November 25, 26 and 27 as dates for the fall tournament of the Country Club, of Lakewood.

Word has been reecived from Lakewood that Jerome D. Travers, Walter J. Travis, Findlay S. Douglas and Fred Herreshoff have entered for the open tournament which will begin there on Thursday. Provided these experts put in an appearance, the tournament is likely to prove the best ever held at the course.

According to foreign advices, a most unusual incident was recently reported from the Whitecraigs course. A hive of bees had burrowed in the thirteenth green, leaving a hole little smaller than a golf ball. A member, after filching on to the green, was bemoaning his luck and "roasting" the committee because of the holes on the green, as the ball settled exactly on the entrance to the bees' "byke." He took his stance to make the most of a bad job, when with an angry buzz, out came a bee, then another and another. Two or three times he essayed to put, until, at last, thinking discretion the better part of golf, he struck his ball hurriedly toward the cup and bolted.

May Raise License Fee.

Elizabeth, Nov. 24.—At a secret conference of the excise commissioners-elect the local situation was discussed. It was decided not to take action regarding the selection of an excise inspector until January 1, when the commissioners organize. The new board will likely raise the license fee, although the increase which the anti-saloon forces anticipate will not be forthcoming, as the commissioners, it is understood, are against making the license too high.

The prayer-meeting at Trinity Reformed church tonight will be in the nature of a praise and Thanksgiving service. Rev. John Y. Broek, pastor, will be in charge.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Haff, of East Second street, are parents of a son born to them yesterday.

Miss Eva Rappleye, of Putnam avenue, has gone to Philadelphia to be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Walling. She will also witness the great football game between Pennsylvania and Cornell tomorrow.

CHURCH TO FOUND SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Morristown Episcopal Church Plans Incorporated Institute in Chester Township.

Morristown, Nov. 24.—Articles of incorporation of St. Bernard's School have been filed in the office of County Clerk E. Bertram Mott. The incorporators undertake to maintain a school under the auspices of the Protestant Episcopal churches where boys of moderate means may be given an opportunity to obtain under religious influences, a grammar and high school education, and a knowledge of mechanics and industrial arts, including farming, dairying, printing and carpentry. The school is to be located in Chester Township.

The trustees are the Rev. Thomas A. Conover, J. William Clark, Chas. M. Chapin, Henry J. Hardenbergh, Richard V. Lindabury, George B. Post, Jr., Percy R. Pyne and Richard Stevens, of Bernardsville; Walter G. Ladd, of Far Hills, and Walter P. Bliss and Edward T. H. Tallmadge, of Mendham.

Articles incorporating the National Machinery Manufacturing Company have also been filed. The company will have its office in Rockaway and will deal in machinery and tools. It is capitalized at $20,000. The incorporators are Thomas Andrews, Bernard Lovatt and Frank L. Stevens.

BOARD WILL NOT AID WOMAN'S CLUB.

E. A. Merrill, president of the Westfield Board of Education, informed the Woman's Club at a meeting last night that the board would not ask the city for anything excepting that which was absolutely necessary for the schools.

Mr. Merrill imparted this information in answer to a question by Mrs. T. D. Bunce, of the committee on special work, who desired to know if the board would maintain a boys' club if the Woman's Club erected a building in Washington School park. The women have been working for over three years past to provide a boys' club, where a gymnasium and swimming pool might be located and provide a place for young men at night.

Mr. Merrill said that from present indications the tax rate would soar six points higher next year, that the schools at present had sixteen rooms overcrowded, and that the trustees would probably ask for an appropriation of $100,000 to build a new school and an addition to the Washington High School.

Recount is Concluded.

New Brunswick, Nov. 24.—The recount of the Fourth ward vote to decide whether John Payton, Republican, or William Goodwin, Democrat, was elected was concluded yesterday afternoon by the County Board of Elections. The board counted 230 for Payton, 197 for Goodwin and held 451 ballots for Judge Bergen to pass upon, more than half of the total vote of the ward.

Easily Directed.

The large, masculine-looking woman entered the big store and accosted the shop-walker in a loud tone:

"I want to get something out of the ordinary," she bawled, "something that none of the other women are wearing, something, however, that will suit me."

"Certainly, madam," was the gentle answer. Men's clothing, third floor, front!"

No Laugh There.

"Cheer up, old man," said a man to a friend who had been contumeliously dismissed by the father of his adored one. "Love laughs at locksmiths."

"Yes, I know," replied the dejected suitor. "But her father isn't a locksmith—he's a gunsmith."

UNITED IN THANKSGIVING

Eight Evangelical Congregations Join in Annual Celebration.

REV. MR. KIMBLE PREACHES.

Appropriate Selections Rendered by Choir Under the Direction of R. L. Laslett Smith.

The storm did not affect the attendance at the union Thanksgiving service in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church yesterday morning and those who joined in the hearty service were well repaid.

Representatives from eight churches in the city were present including their pastors and if the singing of the last hymn, America, was any indication of the feelings of those who joined so heartily in it America need never fear for the patriotism which wins.

The pastors present were Rev. Charles A. Goodrich, of the Congregational church; Ora J. Shoop, of Grace M. E.; L. R. Howard, of Hope chapel; Edwin Shaw, of the Seventh-Day Baptist; Dr. John A. Chambliss, of the First Baptist; Charles E. Kemble, of the Monroe Avenue M. E.; John Y. Broek, of Trinity Reformed, and the pastor of the Crescent Avenue church, in which the services were held Dr. John Sheridan Zelie.

The choir, under the direction of R. L. Laslett Smith, of Stamford, Conn., rendered appropriate anthems in an effective manner. The services opened with hymn No. 709, followed by scripture reading by Mr. Shoop. President Taft's proclamation was read effectively by Rev. L. R. Howard and the invocation given by Rev. Charles L. Goodrich. Rev. Edwin Shaw, of the Seventh-Day Baptist church read the Psalter which was responded to by the entire congregation.

The scripture lesson, read by Rev. Dr. John A. Chambliss, included passages from Paul's Epistle to the Phillippians and the second chapter of Timothy and was followed by the prayer offered by Rev. John Y. Broek, of Trinity Reformed church. The sermon, delivered by Rev. Mr. Kemble, was a thrilling one, full of splendid ideas about the celebration of the national feast day. There was only one reason why the preacher was not interrupted by applause for some of his points and that was the environment.

Rev. Mr. Kemble took his text from Nehemiah 8:10; "Go your way, eat the fat and drink the sweet, and send a portion unto them for whom nothing is prepared; for this day is holy unto our Lord; neither be ye sorry, for the joy of the Lord is your strength."

He said in part: "This is a model Thanksgiving. Thanksgiving Day in America is of Puritan origin, but it did not have its origin in Puritansm. The observance of a day of general thanksgiving is generally traced back as far as 1621, in the Plymouth Bay colony when Governor Winslow appointed a day for mingled prayer and thanksgiving and feasting recognition of God's care of the early colonists.

"Our Pilgrim Fathers were more prone to fasting than to feasting and it is recorded that the first Thanksgiving Day resulted from the bravery of one of the colonists who dared to speak out in 'Meeting' in which he termed the occasion one for feasting and not for weeping. The colonist said: 'Our colony is getting stronger, our cornfields are enlarging, our wives are very obedient, our children are dutiful, the air is salubrious, the woods are full of game and the rivers are full of fish; we have attained our object in coming here, liberty of conscience, I move that we have a day of tharksgiving.'

"The real thanksgiving goes further back than that! It can be traced to the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles, where Nehemiah exhorted the people to do as said in the words of the text. This was amended somewhat by the New England farmer when he injected the sentence, 'to feast and rejoice.'

"You can praise God more by enjoying his gifts than by refusing them. Even the dietary experts are being discredited by the more pleasing and more successful Fletcher. Selfishness is debarred from a true Thanksgiving worship. You cannot eat a Thanksgiving turkey in the proper spirit unless you have shared it with others. Every good which men desire becomes a noble goal only when it is sought for the welfare of others."

Mr. Kemble quoted scripture to prove the meaning of his theme and its reasonableness, but drew attention to the fact that "They are slaves most base, whose love of right is for themselves and not for all the race." Feast and fellowship are not alone a sufficient celebration of Thanksgiv-

DEMOCRATS WILL DINE ON JACKSON'S BIRTHDAY

The Democratic club has elected J. F. Zerega as secretary to take the place of the late Harry W. Leek. Patrick Reville, E. D. Fluck and Frank Shattle have been appointed a committee to arrange for a big banquet on Jackson's birthday. It will be held in this city and a number of prominent Democrats will be invited to speak.

Local Democrats have practically decided to enter into an agreement with The Evening Times, of Elizabeth, whereby local news will be published each day in that paper. It is proposed also to use space in it for the dissemination of Democratic principles. It is planned, it is reported, to attack the Republican administration here, and one of the leaders says that the Common Council and Board of Education will come in for a big share of attention. The paper will have a branch office in this city.

LeRoy J. Ellis, who is general eastern representative of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and who is president of the Democratic club here, is one of the prime movers in the matter. A committee comprising Frank Shattle, chairman; J. O. Stevens, Alexander Kane, D. A. Galbraith, John Connolly and Frank Wagner, has been appointed to complete the details of the arrangement with the paper.

MISS KATHARINE KELLY BRIDE OF JOS. L. KNEE.

Miss Katharine Louise Kelly, daughter of Bartholomew Kelley, of Dunellen, was married to Joseph L. Knee, of Brooklyn, in St. John's church, Brooklyn, on Wednesday afternoon. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Edward Dunphy, rector of the church, in the presence of a large assemblage of friends of the couple.

The bride was attired in a gown of white satin messaline and a white veil. She carried a bouquet of white chrysanthemums. Attending her was Miss Clarice A. Gray, who wore a creation of white over blue organdie. She also carried chrysanthemums.

Edward Knee, of Brooklyn, a brother of the bridgegroom, was best man. The ushers were Daniel Gray and Thomas Kelly. Miss Frances Hunt presided at the organ as the bridal party entered and left the church.

Following the ceremony a reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Knee at the home of the latter's father. At the completion of a wedding tour to Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Knee will reside in Brooklyn.

MISS MARGARET JOHNSON BRIDE OF A. C. LOWANDE.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph J. Johnson, of Newark, formerly of this city, announces the marriage of their daughter, Margaret Isabel, to Alfonso Clement Lowande, of Bound Brook, which took place on Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in St. Rose of Lima's church, Newark. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, Rev. James J. McKeever. Miss Charlotte A. Johnson, a sister, was bridesmaid, and an only brother, Joseph F. Johnson, was best man. After a wedding supper at the bride's home, at which only the immediate families of the contracting parties were present, the couple left on a brief trip. Mr. and Mrs. Lowande will reside in Newark.

Rev. Dr. John A. Chambliss presided at the meeting of the local Sunday-school officers Wednesday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the First Baptist church. George E. Church and Miss May Merrell all spoke on subjects which were brought up at the recent convention.

Mr. Hall discussed general topics. Mr. Church confined himself to adult Bible class work. Mr. Irving told many interesting things about Home Department work and Miss Merrell in her talk about teacher-training work brought to the notice of those present the low standing of Union county in the convention in this particular regard.

It is the intention to organize a teacher-training class here so as to bring this part of the system up to the same standard as exists in other cities. Plainfield stood very high in everything but teaching work, hence the necessity for some radical work in this department.

SHOT AT A PET WOLF; HIT NEW SON-IN-LAW

A wolf, owned by Mrs. Adele von Ohl Parker, ran amuck on the von Ohl farm yesterday, and caused considerable excitement, by killing a number of chickens and geese and afterward attacking Mrs. von Ohl and her son, Percy von Ohl. In an effort to kill the animal Mrs. von Ohl used a shotgun, but instead of hitting the animal, some of the stray shots lodged in the body of her son-in-law, James D. L. Parker. Dr. Zeglio was summoned and attended the man whose wounds are not considered serious.

Mrs. Parker secured the wolf as a gift from a friend in Oklahoma two years ago. It has always been a pet with the members of the family and never before displayed its ferocious qualities.

The animal was tied to a tree in the yard when it broke loose and chased a number of fowl and killed them. When an attempt was made by members of the family to beat the animal into submission the wolf in turn attacked them. Mrs. von Ohl and her son Percy received a number of scratches from the paws of the animal but otherwise they escaped.

RACCOON, 5 FEET, LONG, THEIR HUNT TROPHY

J. LeRoy Gwyer, of Park avenue, deputy State game warden, and his brother, Frederick Gwyer, of New York, who have been enjoying some hunting in this vicinity, were highly elated yesterday over the shooting of one of the largest specimens of savage raccoons ever seen in this section of the State. The animal was captured after a fierce fight, in which the brothers sustained severe briuses, scratches and lacerations.

The raccoon, which measures over five feet from snout to tail, and weighs over fifty pounds, was shot twice by LeRory Gwyer and once by his brother and had to be finally dispatched with the former's trusty knife, after a long chase through the Ohl place on Central avenue, before it was killed. Thinking that the animal was dead, the brothers approached it, and were startled when it sprang at them, inflicting the injuries as stated.

The raccoon was finally killed. The brothers will have the skin made into a rug.

MRS. VONOHL'S NEW CLAIM

Petitions the N. J. Court of Chancery for Remarkable Action.

AN ESTATE IN SCOTLAND.

Millions Held in Scottish Court of Chancery Mrs. Von Ohl Says Belong to Her.

One of the most remarkable petitions that has ever been addressed to the New Jersey Court of Chancery has just been filed by Mrs. Caroline J. von Ohl, of Plainfield, in which she asks that the State's writ of subpoena, issuing out of and under the seal of the court directed to the Court of Claims and Chancery, Edinburgh, Scotland, commanding it, on a certain day and under a certain penalty, personally to appear before the State Chacellor in Trenton and then and there to answer the premises set up in detail in the application papers.

Mrs. von Ohl's petition is predicated on a desire to secure from the New Jersey courts an acknowledgment of her claim on a large amount of money, estimated, in the words of the petitioner, "to be in the millions of dollars," and which is now alleged to be in the hands of the Court of Chancery of Scotland awaiting distribution to the heirs of one Benjamin Laing, who died in 1819 in Plainfield township, New Jersey.

According to Mrs. von Ohl, Benjamain Laing, who was familiarly known as "Captain," was born in Scotland in 1745. After emigrating to this country he accumulated what was considered in those times as a large amount of money. In 1790 Mary Laing, the daughter of John Laing, first, and great aunt of Benjamin Laing, died in Aberdeen, Scotland, leaving a very large estate. Mrs. von Ohl claims that "Captain" Laing never made any serious effort to establish his claim to a share of the property left by his great aunt, "because he was a man of wealth himself and also because a trip to England was a big undertaking in those days."

There are no records in the Court of Chancery to show that there has ever before been an application to subpoena a foreign court into New Jersey.

Colonel C. C. Wells, of San Francisco, attorney for the heirs of the Laing estate, was a guest Thanksgiving Day at the old Laing homestead.

When she arrived at Mrs. Lane's home, she was greeted by the larges company of friends to her great surprise. Parlor games, piano selections, dancing and singing all combined to make the occasion a pleasant one. The home was attractively decorated for the occasion with red and white bunting. A collation was served at midnight. The event was arranged by Mrs. A. R. Bartlau, Mrs. W. E. Lane and Russell VanBuskirk, and it was a success in every way.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

No more welcome news has been given the local theatre going public this season than the announcement that Charles Frohman will present Henri Bernstein's great play, "The Thief" at the Plainfield theatre tomorrow night. A play which has a record of a ten months' run at the Lyceum Theatre, in New York, a three months' run at the Park Theatre, in Boston, and a run of similar duration at Power's Theatre, in Chicago, backed up by a career of the utmost success in all parts of the country, must of necessity be considered a theatrical event of more than ordinary importance in this city, and from present indications the capacity of the Plainfield theatre will be taxed to the utmost on the occasion of the plays presentation here. "The Thief" will be offered with a scenic equipment which is identical with that used during the long run of the piece in New York and played by a specially selected company of unusual merit.

It is more than probable that Morrison's "Faust" holds the record of the longest continuous run of any theatrical production ever placed upon the stage. Placed alongside "The Old Homestead," and "Rip Van Winkle," it has been presented more often than both plays combined. The worth of the production, its always capable interpretation by actors of merit, have endeared it to the theatrical public, added to which its simple and beautiful story which shows how good overcomes evil and you have the secret of its tremendous success with the theatregoers of this country. "Faust" will be presented at the Plainfield theatre, on Monday night, November 29.

"The Traveling Salesman," James Forbes' comedy, which Henry B. Harris will present on Wednesday night, December 1, at the Plainfield theatre, monopolizes the laugh market for the season, inasmuch as it is being designated by the press and public as the comedy success of the year. It will be interpreted here by a cast including none but artists of the first rank and should without question, duplicate the good opinion it obtained in New York among theatregoers of this city. The faithfulness in which Mr. Forbes, the author, has depicted certain incidents in the life of a drummer on the road, is worthy of commendation, sufficiently so, as to warrant the endorsement of the Commercial Travelers Association and the Travelers Protective Association. It will be seen here with the same careful attention to detail and scenic production as marked the New York presentation and the local management vouchsafes for this performance, the treat of the current season.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Hetfield entertained friends at a reunion yesterday.

PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

A Pound Sociable will be held tonight in the Methodist church. The only admission charged is one pound of groceries or provisions and the committee in charge are looking for a large attendance. A pleasing program has been arranged. The donations received will be given to the poor of New York's East Side.

The first touch of real winter upset the plans of many for Thanksgiving day. But few visitors were in town and many of those who had planned to be away were obliged to stay at home.

The storm last night interfered materially with the attendance at the dance, held by the young people of St. Mary's parish, in the lyceum, Berkeley Heights.

The snow storm has given the rabbits a short respite, as it is illegal to hunt while there is a tracking snow on the ground.

Miss Caroline Lent, of the corps of teachers, is spending her Thanksgiving vacation with relatives in Connecticut.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Stillger, of Brooklyn, have been visiting Mr. Stillger's sister, Mrs. Frederick K. Clark.

Frank Corrona and James Gillotti, who have been visiting relatives at Bridgeport, Conn., have returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. George Harper and children spent Thanksgiving with relatives in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Florence Wade, of Stanbury avenue, has been entertaining friends from Passaic.

County Superintendent J. J. Savitz was a welcome visitor Wednesday at the public school.

John Ford has taken a position with the Seely Mill Co. in the valley.

SOUTH PLAINFIELD.

A flock of wild duck, and a large wild goose, was seen here on Wednesday. Although a number of local hunters made an effort to capture a Thanksgiving dinner the birds escaped.

William Flict and family, of Westport, Pa., became residents of this place on Wednesday.

Mrs. Albert Soper and son are spending a few days with relatives at New Market.

John McDonough, of Elizabeth, visited relatives here yesterday.

Frank Thomas spent Thanksgiving with friends at Westfield.

Miss Josephine Debore is visiting friends in New York.

William Hamilton, Jr., is recovering from a cold.

Miss Elsie Burner, of Jackson avenue, has returned from a visit with friends in New York city.

Mrs. John Smith, of New York city, has returned home after a visit with friends in the borough.

NEW MONASTERY OPENED AT BORDENTOWN

The Rt. Rev. Bishop James A. McFaul, of the Trenton diocese, established the enclosure at the Franciscan Monastery of the Order of Poor Clares, at Bordentown, yesterday afternoon, and at that time several sisters entered the cloister never more to make their appearance in the world at large.

Ten sisters entered the monastery, coming from other rmonasteries of the order. About five of these will enter the cloister and the others will be lay sisters, acting as the intermediates between the enclosure and the world. The dedication exercises yesterday were of an elaborate nature and were presided over by the Bishop.

The property to be occupied by the Order of Poor Clares was formerly the St. Joseph's Convent of Mercy and for a number of years was conducted by the Sisters of Mercy, now located in North Plainfield, as an academy for young ladies. The estate, which comprises about 20 acres, was acquired by the new owners six months ago upon the suggestion of the Rt. Rev. Bishop McFaul. It is beautifully situated and considered one of the most attractive places in Bordentown.

NEWARK PIE FOR TAFT GOES ASTRAY.

Where, oh, where is President Taft's Thanksgiving pie? The pride of the Newark bakers, the labor of so many days, the monster pastry masterpiece which was to have delighted the Presidential palate, failed to arrive at the White House yesterday.

And now the question is: "Where did it go?" The pie left Newark yesterday morning and late last night it was announced in Washington that it had failed to reach there and the place of honor on the President's table which the Newark pie should have filled was empty.

The President was waiting for it; even the boys on the street were on the lookout, but no pie came. President Taft came out of the executive offices at noon to enter his automobile to hurry to St. Patrick's church.

"Still waiting for the pie," he called to the newspaper representatives who were sitting in the outer offices. "I'm afraid it must have got lost on the road."

The presidentail pie was baked at the Wagner Pastry Company, Newark. It was thirty-six inches in diameter and weighed more than 100 pounds. It was of the mince variety and had been intended as a gift from the union bakers.

Three bakers, one from Newark and two from Jersey City, accompanied the pie. Efforts last night to find the men were unavailing.

SECOND ATTEMPT TO FIRE BUILDING.

Unoccupied Dwelling Burned to the Ground in Elizabeth Incendiary Blaze.

For the second time within a month a big frame dwelling house at Montgomery place and Norwood Terrace, Elizabeth, unoccupied, was yesterday set on fire and was practically burned to the ground. The structure had just been reconstructed by Henry I. Durlack. The blaze spread quickly in the strong wind and the building was in flames when the firemen arrived.

Chief August Gerstung, of the fire department, stated last night that it would be almost impossible for the building to have caught fire. The police are searching for the incendiary.

In view of the numerous fires started maliciously, the police and fire authorities are making a thorough investigation.

A fire at 220 South Fifth street Wednesday night did little damage. This place is owned by Mrs. Annie Kidder and occupied by Mrs. Peter Ebbe.

PRESIDENT HAS HIS TURKEY.

Quiet Thanksgiving Day at the White House.

Washington, Nov. 26.—President Taft had reason for thanksgiving yesterday because he, too, like millions of Americans, did little work.

The President went to the executive offices in the morning and looked over his mail with Secretary Carpenter, but received no visitors.

At 11 o'clock Mr. Taft and Mr. Carpenter and Captain Butt, his military aide, left the executive offices in one of the White House automobiles for St. Patrick's Catholic church to attend a special Thanksgiving mass. The President returned to the White House shortly after noon and took luncheon with his family.

In addition to the President and Mrs. Taft there were present Helen and Charles Taft and Mrs. Thomas L. Laughlin, of Pittsburg, Mrs. Taft's sister. Robert Taft, the President's other son, did not come home from Yale for the holidays.

Dinner was served at the White House at 6 o'clock, after the President returned from a walk, on which he was accompanied by Captain Butt. Turkey from Rhode Island, apples from Virginia, pie from the kitchen and other things of moment on this day were on the table. The President spent the evening at home.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

BASEBALL.

Charles Murphy, owner of the Cubs, favors a school of baseball, in which fans will be permitted to submit suggestions looking to the betterment of the sport and also propound questions that have baffled them. Already the mail bags are full of communications addressed to the School of Baseball. Here are a few:

When Detroit is here and Cobb is up with the bases full, wouldn't he be forced to answer the telephone if there was a call at the office for him?—Biff Watkins, Philadelphia.

Really, I cannot understand why the big league owners stand for such a short schedule. They could easily open the season on February 1 and close it on December 1 if they used proper judgment. Why, in the Orange Free States the natives play the royal game of buufwuufnuuf, which is strictly an outdoor pastime, all the year around. Look this up, Mr. Murphy.—Percy Nutt, Matteawan, N. Y.

I am chairman of a committee of 300 wealthy southern planters, formed to raise $5,000,000 to chase the hook worm out of the South. Already we have received $4,750,000, but haven't been able to get a cent more. Therefore, we have decided to turn this money over to a fund to provide for destitute wives and children of National and American League owners. If you are willing to accept the money, a check will be mailed immediately.—Baverly Lee Jackson, Natchez, Miss.

To improve the game, I would merely suggest that a time lock be put on the tongues of big league owners, so that they will be silent from October 1 to April 15.—Iva Payne, Mahanoy Plane, Pa.

I am unequivocally in favor of a longer baseball season. There is not one of us in my immediate vicinity that would not be glad to be in a big league baseball park even as late as January 1.—Mike Gunn, Sing Sing, N. Y.

Baseball, the National League in particular, would be much more enjoyable if Hans Wagner were debarred from playing for the rest of his natural life.—Frank Chance, Chicago.

We are organizing a league in Posey county for next season. Is it true that the groundkeeper must be placed on the reserve list?—Roger Waters, Rapture, Ind.

Do you think that run getting would be increased if the home plate was placed near a bar rail?—Samuel Swallows Lexington, Ky.

If the York team, tailender of the Tristate League, is a Class B club, will somebody kindly figure out what class the Boston Nationals were in last season?—Professor Hi Browe, Boston.

National League baseball might be a great deal better next year if the owners engaged Long Tom, the Kentucky giant, for president. He would, at least, be big enough for the job.—Pete McSwatt, Chagrin Falls, O.

BASKETBALL.

The girls' basketball team of N. P. H. S. will play Bernardsville H. S. tomorrow. Two stages will be engaged to take the team and its friends to Bernardsville. The N. P. H. S. team began practice Tuesday. Mr. Webster coached the team.

FRELINGHUYSEN IS TO BE GOERNOR.

Sure of Executive Chair, but He Can Only Serve One Week This Time.

Governor Fort has written to President Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, of the Senate, asking him to act as Chief Executive of the State during his absence in North Carolina on his annual hunting trip next month. As has been previously published, Governor Fort will leave for the South December 4 and will return December 11.

Senator Frelinghuysen has acted as Governor on one other occasion this year. He is a candidate for the Republican nomination to succeed Governor Fort and his friends are working hard in his behalf. He is a handsome man and exceedingly popular He served as personal aide to Governor Stokes, with the rank of colonel, and is serving his second term as Senator. He was elected president of the Senate upon the resignation of Samuel K. Robbins, who was appointed clerk in chancery last April, and is slated for re-election to that place next year.

Otto Mueck, of Elizabeth, has returned after a short stay with friends here.

ing. We must remember "this day is holy unto the Lord." We must remember the less fortunate brother and that he furnishes us with a demonstration that we appreciate God's wonderful bounty to us in just the measure we divide with him.

This day is the anthithesis of Independence Day, celebrated on the Fourth of July. This is "Dependence Day," because we rely on God's bounty for our progress and good."

"Holiness is not indicated by sadness. Christ did not spread a pall over the earth. He lifted the cloud which was upon it. Those who walk in the shadow have their backs to the great sun. When they turn their pathway is bright and the devil cannot see much encouragement in tackling a Christian. Take joy home."

Rev. Mr. Kemble was warmly congratulated by his brother clergymen on his masterful discourse.

NOLEN FAILED TO RALLY AT MUHLENBERG HOSPITAL.

George R. Nolen, of Madison avenue, who was hurt in a fall on West Front street on the evening of November 11, died yesterday in Muhlenberg hospital. The funeral will be held from the home of his mother, Mrs. Maria C. Terry, 331 East Third street, on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Mr. Nolen fell on the sidewalk on West Front street and injured his head. He was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital in a semi-comatose condition and despite the efforts of the hospital staff he failed to rally.

Whiskey Causes Downfall.

John Nevins, employed on the pipe line of the Tide Water Oil Co., at Bordentown, blamed borough whiskey for his deplorable condition when arraigned before Judge Runyon this morning. It was discovered that Nevins was suffering from an injury to his foot, presumably sustained from a fall he had on East Front street previous to being picked up by the police. City Physician Lufburrow attended him and he was sent to the Hospital.

Left Horse in Storm.

James Darby, of Scotch Plains, was arrested Wednesday night for abusing his horse, which he left standing in front of a saloon on East Second street during the storm. He was allowed to go with a reprimand yesterday, when arraigned before Judge Runyon in the city court.

Rich Furs and Fur Coats for Xmas Wear

In purchasing furs every woman prefers to select them where assortments are most comprehensive; where qualities are dependable and prices most reasonable—conditions ever present in this store's showing.

Discriminating shoppers of this city, and for miles around, know this and also of the matchless values we offer, and in consequence—notwithstanding the mild weather—our fur business thus far is much in excess of any we have yet recorded.

We again admonish those who favor Black Furs, that the best time for buying—for Xmas needs—is NOW, while perfect choice and lowest prices are available.

ADVERTISE IN THE DAILY PRESS

MUST HAVE NEW AUTO LICENSES BY NEW YEAR

J. B. R. Smith, State Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, has a large force of clerks at work at Trenton preparing for the issuance of automobile licenses and markers for 1910.

All the present licenses expire with the last of the year, and new ones must be procured by those who want to drive their cars on New Year's Day and thereafter. The department has found that it is impractical to allow every one to retain his 1909 number, and automobile owners and drivers are being so notified. There are upward of 20,000 automobile licenses now in force.

SENATOR BRIGGS FAVORS OFFICERS' SCHOOL PLAN.

United States Senator Frank O. Briggs in the state house ,Trenton, Wednesday was much struck with the proposition to allow officers of the National Guard, from the rank of major down, to be commissioned in the regular army as second lieutenants for one year in order that they might get the training of the regular army and bring back to the National Guard the benefits. Senator Briggs saw in the proposition something good for both the army and the National Guard in that the army is short of second lieutenants, and from this Jersey proposition may come a bill in congress which will allow officers of the National Guard to be commissioned in the regular army as second lieutenants to serve for one year at the compensation given to such officers, and no longer, and to bring back to the National Guard the benefits which they would get from this training.

Senator Briggs, being a West Point graduate, is naturally interested in military affairs. He is on one of the military committees in the Senate, and he endorsed the plan for officers to become second lieutenants as soon as he heard of it. It was pointed out that there were young men in the National Guard who would welcome the chance of getting a year's experience in the regular army if their time was not all lost. To commission them as second lieutenants and to pay them the salaries of such officers would overcome the difficulties in many instances and give to the National Guard officers and experience.

At Proctor's.

Maglin & Bush, comedy acrobats, proved royal entertainers for the little ones at Proctor's yesterday, and the funny clow will keep patrons laughing the rest of the week. Luken's bears are enjoyed by both old and young, while Whitley & Bell are a pair of clever Dutch comedians. The Seamon Duo in new songs and classy dancing, will please everyone, while Lawrence & Edwards, in an Irish sketch, are the best ever. The films d'art improve every day and are wonderful from an artistic viewpoint.

NOTED Y.M.C.A. SPEAKER AT CRESCENT AVE. CHURCH

College men of this city will have an opportunity of listening to an address by John R. Mott, regarded as the most influential layman living, at the Crescent Avenue church on Sunday morning. Mr. Mott enjoys an acquaintanceship among college men all over the world in which circle he has devoted the last twenty years of his life.

Local Y. M. C. A. workers have been brought into contact with Mr. Mott in his work at the Northfield conferences among college students. He is a speaker of the same caliber as Speer and Campbell Morgan, the great English divine.

Mr. Mott, in his address, will have something to say on college conditions in Europe from whence he recently returned. During his stay in Europe he visited all of the leading universities. His popularity among college men is attested to the fact that last February he addressed an audience of 10,000 university men in London.

The theme of Mr. Mott's address will be the "Worldwide work of the Y. M. C. A." He is the general secretary of the World's Student Federation and asociate secretary of the international committee of the Y. M. C. A.

BATTALION DRILLS TO BEGIN TUESDAY.

There will be a series of drills by the Second Regiment Battalions in the Trenton armory, beginning next Tuesday night. At that time the Third Battalion, which is under command of Major John H. McCullough, of Trenton, will drill. This battalion comprises companies A, B, D and E, the Trenton companies.

The Second Battalion, comprising companies C, I, K and M, under command of Major William B. Martin, will drill at the armory December 1, and the First Battalion, which comprises companies H, L, G and F, under command of Major Horace M. Reading, will drill in the armory December 2.

Last night there were a number of the guardsmen at the armory talking over the Perth Amboy strike, which occurred a year ago yesterday. There was an attempt to have a celebration of the event, but this was discouraged by the officers, because of the severity of the occasion which called the men from their homes to quell the strikers in the neighboring county.

The annual banquet of the officers of the Trenton battalion will take place next month. Preparations for the same are now under way, but it is not decided whether it will take place in the armory or elsewhere.

TO RUSH CHRISTMAS MAIL TO EUROPE

In an effort to get the Christmas mail to England and the Continent before Christmas it was decided on Wednesday that the American liner St. Louis would sail a day earlier on her eastward trip to Southampton in December. The date of her departure will be changed, therefore, from Saturday, December 18, to Friday, December 17, at 10 a. m. The mail for Europe should, therefore, be posted in Plainfield on Thursday morning, December 16.

The St. Louis is the last vessel from this side by which the mails can reach Great Britain and the Continent before Christmas Day. She is due at Plymouth, Cherbourg and Southampton Friday, December 24.

PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. George E. Cowling, of Codington avenue, spent Thanksgiving Day with Mrs. Cowling's parents at Somerville.

The VanEmburgh family reunion yesterday at the home of H. C. VanEmburgh, on East Second street, was a most enjoyable occasion.

Miss Marion Phillips, of Mt. St. Mary's College, is spending the Thanksgiving season at the home of her parents in New York city.

Miss Kitte Cooley, of Somerset street and Miss Ruth Martin, of Craig place, were guests of Miss Josephine Cooley at her home on Seventh street, Brooklyn yesterday.

HIDDEN WEALTH AIDS WIDOW.

Trenton Fireman Had $700 Behind Picture in Fire House.

Mrs. Charles Aten, widow of a well known Trenton fireman, who committed suicide by drowning five years ago, and who is now seriously ill in a hospital, has been insured additional comforts by the finding of about $700 left by her husband.

Fellow firemen found the money in a bank book which had been hidden behind a picture in the headquarters of Trenton's Exempt Firemen's Association. No one thought of moving the picture until it was decided to repaper the rooms.

THE TRUE RELIGION.

"O brother man! Fold to thy heart thy brother.
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there:
To worship rightly is to love each other:
Each smile a hymn; each kindly deed a prayer.
Follow with reverend steps the great example
Of him whose holy work was doing good;
So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple,
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude."—Crown.

Electric Railways for Sweden.

Within the near future definite plans will be formulated for the electrification of the more important State railways of Sweden, says Cassier's Magazine. The first line to be taken in hand will be, in all probability, that between Kiruna, the centre of the great iron ore fields of Lapland, and Riksgransen, on the Norwegian frontier, a distance of about eighty-one miles. It is a section of the Lulea-Gellivare-Narvik Railway, completed in 1903, over which large and ever growing quantities of iron ore from the rich fields of Gellivare, Malmberget, Kirunavara and Luossavaara are transported for export from the terminal ports—Lulea, on the Gulf of Bothnia, and Narvik, on the Atlantic.

To meet the present largely increased demands upon it and enable the management to run heavier trains at higher speed, the Kiruna-Riksgransen section, especially, must be either reconstructed with double tracks or electrified, and of these alternatives the second seems from every point of view the wiser and more economical.

The adoption of electric traction on this line, far above the Artic Circle and the most northern railway in the world, will be an event of considerable importance in the history of electricity, and cannot fail to stimulate in marked degree the demand for similar action in respect of other Swedish railways. Nor will it be without value as a practical illustration of the unbounded potentialities of Sweden's wealth of water falls, not limited to a few special regions but at hand and only awaiting development to benefit every province.

An Anatomical Location.

McMurf met Pleader, the lawyer, not long ago. "Ah," said he, "you're just the man I've been looking for for a week. I went over to your office, but found you had moved."

"Yes, I'm a block around the corner now," said Pleader. "A dentist has my old place."

"So?" ventured McMurf. "Then after this when we want our teeth pulled we'll have to go where we used to get our legs pulled."—Chicago Journal.

Polish Society's Dance.

FATHER AT THE SUMMER COTTAGE.

He has two weeks to rest, and so
He hurries up to Shady Nook,
"Now, here," says dad, "I'll let things go,
And lounge around and read a book."

Next day his wife's relations come,
To entertain them was his job;
And every day it was the same,
Of friends he always had a mob.

He dug the worms and minnows caught
That they all might a-fishing go;
He ran the naphtha launch and taught
The children how to swim and row.

He cleaned the fish and baited hooks,
To get the water was his chore;
He had no time to spend with books,
At night he slept upon the floor.

AFTER THE PROPOSAL.

Dolly—So your father handled him without gloves?

Molly—Yes; and it yould have been better for poor, dear Cholly if he had done it without shoes!

The Wings.

Riches have wings,
There's no doubt of that.
For wife requires 'em
To trim up her hat.

Called His Bluff.

"Yes," said young Windig, boastingly, "I pass most of my time between Chicago and New York."

"That's what your cousin told me," rejoined Miss Cayenne.

"My cousin!" replied Windig. "W-what did she say?"

"She said," replied Miss Cayenne, "that you lived in a little town in Ohio."

He Could Tell.

Ostend—Pa, what is mamma reading about? I just heard her say "It's an outrage."

Pa—Oh, some writer has been ridiculing the suffragettes, I guess.

Ostend—Then she just said: "How true it is!"

Pa—Oh, that's some other pen pusher lampooning us poor men, my son.

Natural Thought.

Redd—This paper says there is on exhibition in a window in Saco the largest lobster that has been landed in these parts for years, if ever.

Greene—Does it give the name of the lady who landed him?—Yonkers Statesman.

ALAS!

Mr. Bore—Be sure to tell me when you want me to go.

Miss Blunt—It's an hour too late for that!

Advice.

If you would climb to heights of fame,
Young man, bear this in mind:
Don't envy those who are in front
Nor scoff at those behind.

Place for Trunks.

"Where did you put the elephants on the ship coming over?" asked the funny man.

"Downstairs in the hold, of course," replied the circus man.

"I thought they only put the trunks in the hold that were not to be used coming over?"—Yonkers Statesman.

How Could She.

He (rhapsodically)—I adore everything that is grand, exquisite, supereminent. I love the peerless, the serene, the perfect in life.

She (blushing coyly)—Oh, George, how can I refuse you when you put it so beautifully?

Too Tame.

"Great bargain rush at Skinnim's to-day."

"Anybody hurt?"

"No."

"It must have been a dress rehearsal."

About the Size of It.

Freddy Rhymer—What is a "poem of passion," pa?

Mr. Rhymer—It's the stamp-devouring one that travels on round-trip tickets and comes home to roost.

Extraordinary Sale of Men's Suits

$14, $16, $18 and $10 Fall and Winter Suits 12.75

This is indeed an extraordinary suit sale for which the backwardness of the season is wholly responsible. It is not only an extraordinary sale on account of the wide provision of fabrics and patterns but also on account of the unusual saving on smart heavyweight suits before winter has scarcely begun.

There are about 987 suits included in this grand offering and just that many men and young men will be able to provide themselves with a new suit of refined character and distinctiveness in time for the holiday season and at the same time pocket a snug sum.

Every one of these suits shows the earmarks of exceptionally high-class tailoring and possesses those shape-retaining qualities which have made M. & B. Clothing famous for half a century.

Among the choice are worsteds, cheviots and cassimeres, in handsome shadow stripes and pencil stripes over backgrounds of gray and black. Also blue and black thibets and blue and black worsted cheviots.

The models include conservative styles for men of modest tastes as well as London cuts for young men who prefer the more striking effects.

Early selection is suggested on account of the great demand which such an important clothing movement as this is bound to create.

If Lamp Is Poor Light Is Poor

Poor light does not necessarily imply poor gas or poor electricity. More often the cause is poor lamps or poor fixtures.

Think this over.

Our gas and electricity are of high standard, produced according to most approved methods. Our distributing systems are the best that money and skill can provide. But our efforts to give good service are partly nullified if your house connections or lamps are defective.

Electric service may be perfect to the lamp socket and poor lamps will prevent you from getting good light.

Gas of best quality, delivered under proper pressure, will not give maximum results with an inefficient burner.

Good lamps are essential to good lighting. Are your lamps good? If not tell us. We will help you make them so. We are as anxious to give satisfactory service as you are to receive it.

BAMBERGER'S

"THE ALWAYS BUSY STORE"

MARKET, HALSEY & BANK STS.

BETWEEN OURSELVES

It's about advertising, tonight—or, to be exact, the truth in advertising.

When we started this store sixteen years ago, we decided, apart from the ethics of the case, that honest publicity was pretty good business policy, and that by adhering strictly to the truth in all of our store announcements we would in time be able to make our advertising dollars do double duty.

We've stuck pretty closely to this policy ever since, and we're now reaping the reward of our—we were going to say "honesty," but we'll change it to good, sound business sense—trade logic, as it were.

Whatever you see in our ads. you may accept it as a fact. Maybe our values aren't as striking, sometimes, as stores which handle the truth less rigidly, but then there's a deal of satisfaction in knowing that what we say is so.

We're going to have more to say along this line shortly—a whole lot more.

THE NEW FAD.

Once we rode horses
And thought they were fast;
But found that their fleetness
Was not so to last.
Then steam drew our coaches,
O'er land we go,
And wondered however
We traveled once slow.

But into our living,
Our peace laying waste,
Came leaping and bounding
The Spirit of Haste,
Into his car horseless,
He tossed us with glee,
Nor unless we were breathless,
Content could we be.

But to dash through the ocean,
To race o'er the land,
Are joys our tastes jaded
Not now understand.
A swifter progression,
We feel we must try,
So the world's getting crazy
To learn how to fly.

THOSE SUMMER MEN.

He—Do you read fiction during the summer?

She—No; but I listen to it.

Putting on Airs.

They're getting stylish,
I'm afraid;
Their hired girl
Is now a "maid."

Had Nothing to Say.

The stranger had been compelled to linger twenty-four hours within the gates.

"Well," queried the landlord of the village inn, as the stranger was settling his bill, "what do you think of our place as a summer resort?"

"I'd hate to tell you," answered the stranger, as he picked up his grip. "Even what I think of it as a last resort would not look well in print."

Those Car Windows.

George Washington never told a lie because he was cautious.

One day, on a railroad train, a lady asked him to open a window. Instead of saying, "Certainly, I will, madam," George said, "I will try."

George did try, and, of course, you know the result.

But his reputation for veracity was still safe.—Yonkers Statesman.

Looking After Business.

"I like this flat very well," she said.

"I will be very glad to rent it to you," replied the landlord.

"But we have two children?"

"They need not interfere with you and your husband having the flat. I have a house two blocks down the street which you can rent for the children and the nurse!"—Yonkers Sstatesman.

MANY EXCUSES.

Tall Office Boy—Dat new kid is stuck on his people. He's always talking about his forefathers.

Short Office Boy—Four fathers? Gee, what a lucky kid! In de baseball season think how many grandfathers he must have.

In Cupid's Court.

Judge Cupid at the prisoner
Did look somewhat askance;
"You stole a look," he said, "your guilt
Is patent at a glance."

The Sequel.

Tourist—What's going on around here?

Chief Umbrella—Umph! Poor Lo have big meeting. After meeting have dog feast.

Tourist—Oh, I see. After the powwow comes the bowwow.

An Unnecessary Word.

Yeast—I understand the Abyssinian wife is the head of the house.

Crimsonbeak—Why try to waste time by introducing that word Abyssinian?"—Yonkers Statesman.

Familiar Taste.

Farmer Ryetop—You seem to enjoy those fresh vegetables?

Summer Boarder—Yes, it is an acquired taste. You get them from the same store up in town that we do.

Expected Back.

Prisoner—Can I speak with the convict Smith for one moment?

Jailer—No, he has just left after finishing his time. But ask me again in about a week.

Tuxedo Suits $15

We've heard men say they have had more solid comfort and more service out of their Tuxedo Dress Suits.

The trouble with most men they get too much service out of their Evening Suits; wearing them so long that they become out of style; and there are those who don't own one at all.

Little excuse for any man to be without a Tuxedo Suit when we sell such splendid tailored ones in the very latest models, equaling in appearance those the lowest priced tailors would ask $30 to $50 for, and the clothes being all good quality, dense black, for only $15

The beauty of it is we can fit you correctly, for if we have not your size in stock we will make it for you.

Full Tuxedo Dress Suits, $15.

Tuxedo Coats and Vests, $12.

Black Trousers, $4.

THREE BASKETBALL GAMES AT Y. M. C. A.

While snow blocked all outdoor sport yesterday there was plenty doing in basketball at the local Y. M. C. A. courts. In the afternoon three games were played. The banner attraction was the clash between the Y. M. C. A.'s first five and the Millburn A. C. The visitors were humbled to the tune of 57 to 40.

Milburn started off at a hurricane clip by scoring three goals in the first four minutes of play. The first half was a pretty contest, in which both teams executed brilliant work. At the close of the first session three points separated the teams, the score being 28 to 25 in Plainfield's favor.

The locals walked away from the visitors in the final round and at the end the score was 57 to 40. Doane and Aalholm starred for the locals while R. Marshall carried off the honors for Millburn. The lineups follow:

Y. M. C. A.—Collier, Aalholm, forwards; Cahoone, c; Rumsey, Whitford and Linke, guards.

Millbur — Livingston and Schmidt, forwards;; Beister, c; E. Marshall and R. Marshall, guards.

The Y. M. C. A. "seconds" were also victorious in their contests with the Millburn "seconds," the score being 42 to 25. The linueps:

Y. M. C. A.—Miner and Templin, forwards; Hoagland, c; Gavett and Fritts, guards.

Millburn—Fleming and Van Ingen, forwards; McCulkin, c; Olver and Smith, guards.

The "Boy's" five trounced a picked team from Bound Brook by the score of 57 to 6. The lineups:

Boy's team—Coyle and Manley, forwards; Ulmer, c; Naylor and Vail, guards.

Bound Brook—Nonamaker and Mingle, forwards; Stryker, c; Gillespie and Rose, guards.

BOWLING.

By losing a series in the individual tourney yesterday at Campbell's alleys, Frank Blatz lost all chance to tie Johnny Campbell for the championship.

Matthews with very little trouble defeated Blatz and the former also won from Stout.

In the final series Blatz defeated Stout. The scores:

Blatz	177	167
Matthews	202	172
Matthews	212	155	186
Stout	164	199	179
Blatz	178	215	197
Stout	188	176	180

PERSONAL.

Mrs. L. B. Woolston and daughter, Miss Marguerite Woolston, of Fairview avenue, are visiting relatives at Beverly.

Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Hegeman and son, Harold, who are living in New York this winter, spent yesterday with relatives here.

William Rafferty, of Sandford avenue, has returned to Georgetown University, after spending the past two weeks at his home.

Among the many Thanksgiving family reunions held yesterday, none was more enjoyable than that of the Force family at the home of A. L. Force, 82 Duer street.

Elden Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson A. Miller, of Washington avenue, who is a student at Syracuse University, New York, is spending his Thanksgiving vacation at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore H. Hardy and Mrs. L. K. Prescott, of Brooklyn, and Mrs. Eva Laing, of Washington, spent Thanksgiving Day at the home of A. L. Force, 82 Duer street.

Soccer Game Was Postponed.

The soccer game scheduled between the Plainfield A. F. C. and the Maple Field club, of Jersey City, had to be called off yesterday on account of the weather. The Newark Strollers are announced as the opponents of the Plainfield team here tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, but the game will be played only if the grounds are in good order.

Disorderly Italian Fined.

Angelo Delago, an Italian, who was drunk and caused such a disturbance on Norwood avenue last evening that the neighborhood was in an uproar, was fined $15 this morning by City Judge Runyon. Delago was acting like a crazy man and tried to enter several houses. The alternative of the fine was made twenty days in the county jail.

Violated Hack Ordinance.

Peter Seader, Sr., Thomas Higgins, Gus Mobus and William Bird, all hackmen were arraigned before City Judge William Runyon yesterday for violating the hack ordinance. William Bird, who was an old offender had his license revoked, while the others were lectured by Judge Runyon and threatened with the same fate if they were caught again.

Stole Friend's Clothing.

Sarah Humble, colored, formerly of South Second street, but now of Scotch Plains, was held yesterday by City Judge Runyon in default of $200 bail for the action of the grand jury on a charge of stealing $35 worth of clothing from Isabelle Grant, also colored, of West Fifth street.

develops every atom of heat energy possible, by complete combustion, and leaves no clinkers and no waste.

The square pot burns less fuel and it thoroughly consumes all it takes—a double economy. All your earnings don't go into the fire when you run a BOYNTON.

For cleanliness and the trifling care necessary to run it the BOYNTON is easily the first choice of every man who takes the trouble to get acquainted with it. Look up the BOYNTON dealer in your town. The price is not prohibitive.

There are BOYNTON heating plants of all kinds. Ask about our Round or Sectional Boilers for Steam or Hot Water. Also Ranges.

Easy Fat Reduction

When buttermilk and gymnastics were the only known cures for overfatness many people preferred to stay fat—dreading the remedy worse than the disease.

Now these two grim lions on the road to slimness have been overcome and the loss of 20 to 50 pounds has become a very safe and pleasant affair. You can eat and drink and be merry and lazy and still lose 10 to 16 ounces of useless fat daily. Folks with double chins and stout abdomens can lose them in a month and yet not strain, bother or deny themselves a single blessed thing. It does not cost much, either—any druggist will fix you up—and there is no waiting; results begin when you do.

Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime of this simple, harmless mixture: ½ oz. Marmola, ½ oz. Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic, and 3½ oz. Peppermint Water, and you will strip off evenly, without wrinkling, all the useless fat that now annoys and punishes you.

CAUCUS DECEMBER 14.
WARD-EDGE COMBINE.

Assemblyman William W. Smalley, the dean of the House, after a consultation with the members of the Assembly at the State House, Trenton, Wednesday, fixed Tuesday, December 14, as the date of the House caucus. It is now practically assured that Harry Ward, of Bergen, will be the next Speaker, and Walter E. Edge, of Atlantic, the mapority leader, although the members opposing this slate still have hopes of breaking it.

Some of the older members continued their opposition to the selection of Colonel Edge as leader, on the ground that he is a first term man, but the indications are that they will all line up for him when the caucus gets together.

Captain "iJm" Parker will, for the eleventh time, be chosen as clerk of the House, and Upton Jeffries, of Camden, will be his assistant. The other officers are still in doubt, however, and signs point to the bringing to the State House of many new faces at the coming session. A strong movement was started to make Assemblyman Carlton B. Pierce, of Union, who has been a strong candidate for leader, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the highest House committee, which usually goes to the leader. The plan is to have Mr. Edge, when chosen as leader, take the chairmanship of the Revision of Laws Committee.

A Queer Malady.

Sprigg went to a noted physician to ask advice as to his health. In pompous tones he addressed the doctor:

"I-ah-have come to-ah-ask you-ah-what- what is-ah-the doosid mattaw with me-ah!"

"I find your heart is affected," said the physician, gravely.

"Oh-ah-anything else-ah?"

"Yes, your lungs are affected, too."

"Anything-ah-else-ah?"

"Yes, your manners are also affected."

Okra Soup.

WISDOM TEETH AND THE HUMAN JAW CHANGE.

The doctrine of the survival of the fittest in its application to the organs of the human body prompted some highly interesting speculations in the course of Dr. J. Lindsay's Bradshaw lecture delivered before the Royal College of Physicians in London, England, recently.

The lecturer sugested that "wisdom teeth are a ruined industry" and said that sensational though the thought appears it seems probable that the sense of smell, no longer of much practical importance to sivilized man and hence removed from the action of natural selection, is becoming rudimentary.

The many yards of the human intestine, it has been suggested, are simply "survivals from a herbivorous progenitor and of no service to a mixed feeder like man." The lecturer added that some authorities advocated snipping off a few feet from man's tediously long intestine. Like the speeches of many politicians, it is rambling, involved and an interminable time coming to the point; it should be cut down.

The human jaw, Dr. Lindsay thinks, is getting smaller and smaller, which explains why the teeth are often so crowded together that the removal of some of them is a necessity in early life. Our toes, once so handy when we swung on the branches of the primeval forest, are also undergoing elimination except the great toe, "which is of service in maintaining the upright posture."

That civilization runs counter to natural selection Dr. Lindsay thinks is evident, and he instances the marriage customs, the not uncommon conjunction of youth and beauty with age and wealth, for example. He also questions whether the medical responsibility is free from serious profession "when it preserves those whom nature has plainly marked out for elimination."

In spite of the average increasing duration of human life, the abatement of some of the worst scourges of the human race, such as tuberculosis, typhoid fever and malaria and the declining sick rate of benefit societies, physical degeneration is, Dr. Lindsay believes, going on in England, and the moral he deduces is the profound influence of evolution on the race and the importance to medicine of keeping in view the great discoveries of Darwin.—London Correspondence, N. Y. Sun.

VIII.—Dangers of the Elevated Nose

"BUT what's the matter with them, honey?" demanded the colonel. "Ain't they good people? Ain't they honest? Don't they behave themselves about as well as any of your friends? Don't they"—

"Yes, papa, yes!" interrupted his daughter. "They're very nice people, and I have no fault to find with them, but"— And Mrs. Rollins turned up her pretty little nose and gazed silently at the fire.

"Uh, huh!" grunted the colonel. "I understand. They just ain't in your class, accordin' to your way of lookin' at it. But, honey, I wouldn't twist my face up that way if I was you. It'll make wrinkles quicker than anything in the world, and the worst kind of wrinkles too. You know, there's wrinkles and wrinkles. Some wrinkles light up the plainest face with beauty. Yes, honey, that's a fact. And then there's some that make the most beautiful face look ugly. You're developin' some of that kind when you turn up your nose in that way. Uh, huh! I thought that'd make you drop it. And now you're makin' some of the kind that add to beauty—the wrinkles that come from smiles.

UGLY WRINKLES ON THE BRAIN.

"Yes, indeedy, my dear, the turned up nose is a dangerous thing. It not only makes ugly wrinkles on the face, but it makes ugly wrinkles on the brain. Never thought about that, did you? No, I reckon not, but it's true. I never saw a human brain, but they say it's all covered over with wrinkles, and the scientific fellows have a lot of theories about them. But I've got a notion that they're caused by the same thoughts and feelin's and emotions that put the lines on the countenance. Anyhow, if an elevated nose don't make its mark on the outside of the brain it does on the inside, and it amounts to the same thing, for the movements of the face that go to make up what we call expression are nothin' more than the sign of the workin' of the mind. When you curl up your little proboscis, like you did a bit ago, that's a sign that you was thinkin' yourself a little better, maybe a whole lot better, than the people we was talkin' about.

"Now, honey, I want to tell you that that's a pretty risky attitude for anybody to take. I believe in a man thinkin' well of himself or a woman thinkin' well of herself, but when you begin to make comparisons between yourself and other folks to the disadvantage of the other folks you're gettin' on dangerous ground, for two reasons. In the first place, you're cultivatin' an opinion of yourself that ain't warranted by the facts. You're settin' yourself up on a pedestal that's full of cracks, and one of these fine days it'll crumble to pieces, and down you'll drop like a load of bricks, for whenever a man or a woman raises himself in his mind above his fellows he's gettin' ready for a fall. If he don't topple over of himself somebody will pull out the props from under him, and then the people he's been lookin' down on will look down on him and laugh—just laugh. That's the second reason why the turned up nose is bad business. It spoils you, and then it spoils your friends, for the habit of thought that expresses itself in the turned up nose is fatal to the kind of self esteem that everybody ought to have, and it's fatal to friendship.

A WRONG PERSPECTIVE.

"You see, honey, an elevated nose is a good deal like one of those old fashioned blunderbusses—it hits a whole lot of people that you didn't aim at, and whoever it hits it hurts. Nobody can tell where it's goin' to strike, and so they get in the habit of dodgin' whenever it comes around. There's a good many folks you can scold and abuse and they'll take it good natured and keep on being friends, but just let 'em get the notion that you're sneerin' at 'em and it's all off. Most all of us have an idea that we're about as good as the next one, and nothin' makes us madder than a turned up nose, and the greater the difference between us in wealth or social station the madder we get about it.

"If you're goin' to get the best there is out of the world and out of the people in it you've got to meet folks on the level. You go up to the top of a skyscraper buildin' and look out the window down at the men and women in the street below, and they all look mighty small—not more'n half as big as you are. But when you go down in the elevator and get out on the pavement you find they average up about the same size as yourself. It's all a matter of the point of view, and the turned up nose gives you a wrong perspective. It gives you false notions of your own importance and your own position, while everybody else can see that you're just one of the common run of folks and have no right to feel yourself any better than they are. And so you get out of touch and out of sympathy with the rest of the world around you, and then you begin to sour. That's just as certain as that

THE ONLY GOOD YARDSTICK.

God made little apples. A sneer in the brain is a sign of fermentation, and fermentation, you know, comes mighty close to bein' rotten.

"Now, then, gettin' right down to brass tacks, as the fellow says, the only reason you've got for elevatin' your nose at the people we was talkin' about is that they don't run in your set. Well, what if they don't? Is your set the standard by which all others have to be measured? I reckon not. It takes all kinds of people to make a world, as you've heard before, and some of the best ones in it make the least show.

"You can't tell by lookin' at the people you meet on the street how many of them's beneath you and how many's above you. You can't tell by lookin' at a woman's clothes or countin' the money she's got in the bank whether you've got a right to look down on her or she's got a right to look down on you. You can't tell by hearin' a woman quote Ibsen whether she's better or worse than you. It ain't money or clothes or blood or culture that counts when it comes to measurin' up men and women. The only yardstick that's good anywhere on earth and in any society is character. That's common, or uncommon, to rich and poor, and your washerwoman may have as much of it and be as much entitled to your respect as the president of your club. One of the two greatest men I ever had the honor to know was a professor of English in the state university; the other was a ditch digger who couldn't spell his own name.

"But even when you size up people accordin' to the standard of your club it ain't safe to turn up your nose, for this is a mighty wabbly world, and the folks that's up today may be down tomorrow, and the ones that's down tomorrow may be up at the top of the heap next week. If you're goin' to judge people by that standard you've got no right to object if they measure you by the same rule, and it's mighty embarrassin', I imagine, to find the folks you've been turnin' up your nose at in a position to elevate their noses at you. But, say, little girl, it's bedtime, and here I've been fussin' and scoldin' the whole evenin'. Don't you feel bad about it, though, honey. Your old daddy thinks you're the finest ever, but he don't want you to find it out. Good night."

Brief Truths.

The female bargain hunter knows all the countersigns.

The married beauty always looks upon her husband as the beast.

No woman wants her offspring to pose as an object lesson at a mothers' meeting.

One of the things a man can't understand is why his enemies seem to have so many friends.

The smile of a good woman will do a man more good than a dozen handed to him by a bartender.

After a man has been married a year he can't see any reason why his wife should want a new hat.

It sometimes happens that a man is kept from buying mining stock because he hasn't got the ready cash.

Once in awhile a man is too proud to beg and too honest to steal. Then the only alternative he has left is to go to work.

Occasionally a married man does a lot of talking when he is away from home, because that is about the only chance he gets.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Prayer Meeting Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 28, 1909.

Topic.—Home missions, "The battle of the slum."—Luke xiv, 15-23.

There is no more grave or serious missionary problem before the Christian church today than that of carrying the gospel to the slum districts of our large cities. When we face the problem of the foreigners segregated in our large cities, our industrial and agricultural centers, it seems to be a great one, but it is as nothing compared with the reformation and redemption of those who have become victims of the sins and allurements of the slums. The difficulties involved in successful Christian work in the slums are colossal and almost insurmountable. Were it not that "all things are possible with God" man would be compelled to give up in despair in the face of the gigantic difficulties presented. When we think of what needs to be done and how little is being or can be done the heart grows sick and we feel like exclaiming with Paul, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Many of the victims of the vices of slum life do not want to give it up, and what can be done for those who desire to have nothing done for them? Thousands perhaps would like to break away from their foul surroundings, but how can they? And if they did where would they go and what would they do? Would even the Christian church receive them into its membership and try to help them upward? Sad to say, there are possibly few churches that would do so. Into what home would one stained with the life of the slums be received even to do the most menial labor? The gospel is being preached to many of them, especially in theaters on Sabbath nights after the church services are over.

Many profess conversion, and many are converted, but their future is full of darkness and almost despair. The men may meet with some help and encouragement, but the women have very small prospects of reclamation, and many of them, it must be said, of dire necessity drift back into the old life of vice and sin. Houses of refuge for fallen women reclaim and restore many, but few indeed in comparison to the numbers involved, and even then the places made vacant are soon filled by new victims.

The duty of doing something rests upon Christianity and Christian workers. It is easy to criticise municipal governments for not keeping large cities free from saloons and gambling dens and other resorts of vice, but the problems before them are almost as great as those before the church. They might do more than they do perhaps and probably would if they received more encouragement from good citizens instead of so much severe condemnation. But what they can do they should do, for they not only represent the law, but also upon them rests the duty of enforcing the law. By Christian people one or two things can and should be done. It has been well said that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Could not Christain people save many from the slums? And, if so, ought they not to do so? Could not many be saved from the slums if a little care and attention were paid to them by the preferred followers of Christ? If a young man starts downward, who knows but that a little prompt attention might save him? But, instead of that, is not the tendency just the opposite? Do not slanderous tongues help him on? Do not his associates begin to pay less attention to him and gradually withdraw from association with him? And what is the result?

To the slums he goes for companionship, and his ruination soon becomes complete. The same is the history of thousands of women in the slums today. They may be naturally wild in disposition in their early young womanhood. Through inexperience of life they may commit indiscretions and perhaps nothing more. Just at that moment their friends should hold the firmer to them. But do they? In most cases they do not. They are received with sarcastic smiles and titters. Skirts are raised when they pass by lest their wearers become contaminated. They must not be in such a class in the Sabbath school or certain others will leave it. Shunned and deserted just when they need a kind word or a saving hand clasp, they, too, pass out of sight and are soon found in the slums. To many religion is but a farce, but nowhere does the farce appear to such an awful extent as in the average Christian's attitude toward those who have fallen, toward those who are "down and out." Yet many of these same people are the veriest hypocrites and baser at heart than many of the unfortunate weaklings who have drifted to the slums. Another thing is absolutely certain—Christian young people should not go slumming. Through slumming parties many have been led into slum life. No pure minded young man or young woman should ever seek vice even just to look upon it. The very sight soils the purity of the heart and soul. "Avoid the very appearance of evil." In its ripened stage it is foul and loathing, but its veneer is not so, and many are allured to it through such visits. Nor should young people, and especially young women, think even of doing work in the slums. Men and strong men at that, should be selected for such work, together with women of some age and firm will and character. And, last of all, let us pray for those who are lost. God can reclaim them. Let us ask Him to do so.

The Battle

CHAPTER XVII.

THE BATTLE IS ON.

THE offices of the East Side Associated Bakeshops had not closed that evening at the customary hour, however. The threatened strike had suddenly assumed ugly proportions.

Haggleton secretly welcomed the trouble with the hands in the bakeshops. What he foresaw came to pass. Philip, face to face with the poor in his new position as a business man, suddenly discovered their unreasonableness, their lack of foresight, their selfishness, which could not calculate future benefits, their disregard of the good of the money.

Without realizing it he ranged himself that evening on the side of capital.

So he stayed on alone in the office, waiting for news, watching the telephone. Haggleton and Gentle returned, the former stopping a moment to ask for news, then went across the hall to the other apartment.

At 9 o'clock Margaret suddenly appeared. Philip clasped her tumultuously.

He kissed her fondly again and again.

"Give me your left hand, so!" he asked. "Now close your eyes."

She obeyed, with a smile. Philip took from his waistcoat pocket an engagement ring and slipped it on her finger.

"Now look," he commanded.

Margaret gave a little cry of glad surprise.

She kissed the ring, then held up her lips to him.

They stood again a moment in blissful silence, but not for long. Margaret had come on a serious mission. She disengaged herself.

"Oh, Phil," she said pitifully, "I came to tell you about— You remember Emmy and Benny, the little children we sent to the hospital?"

"I know, dear. Their father hurt his hand the other day."

"Hurt his hand! It was crushed in your kneading machine, and now it has been amputated."

"It is his own fault. He was careless."

"His children were left unprovided for," continued Margaret, looking at him reproachfully, "and now—little Benny is dead."

Philip looked concerned.

The telephone bell rang sharply, and he sprang up and ran to the instrument.

Margaret saw, with a pang, that little Benny and his maimed father were immediately forgotten. This was business! Her heart sank as she listened to her lover's side of the brisk conversation over the phone:

"Hello. The Wisconsin flour mills? Yes, this is the East Side Associated Bakeshops. What's that? Oh, that's all right; we have the strike pretty well in hand. Yes, the bills will be promptly met. No, no, Mr. Williams, we are taking fifty carloads a week now, and there's a Minneapolis concern that will do better by us. Yes, that's right; that's what we ask, 20 per cent off. I didn't catch what you said. Yes, I know that we must be making money; that's what we are here for. Oh, no, it's 20 off or nothing doing. All right. Goodby."

He turned to Margaret.

"Phil, have you not noticed that I have been worried and unhappy lately?" she asked.

"Yes, I have, dear."

"It is what you said to me the other evening about business being the man's province, not the woman's. It is because I have seen you become entirely absorbed in business schemes and money making. Phil, you are forgetting your beautiful ideals."

The young man looked at her.

"It's true," he said at last thoughtfully. "Mr. Jackson has had an influence over me. It is as if he had waked up something in me that I did not know was there."

"Oh, Phil!" cried Margaret in dismay.

"I have forgotten my ideals, yes," continued Philip, "but I have not forgotten them. I have come to see that money is needed to carry them out. Money is needed to make you happy."

"I don't want money."

"Well, I do." He spoke with decision. "And I am going to have it. And that means an active business life for me."

"You have decided all this without telling me?" she asked.

"I am telling you now, dear. We can talk it over together."

"Phil," she said, "there's something that must be done at once before we settle this. I promised Emmy that I would see about little Benny's funeral. Will you come with me?"

She rose.

Phil, too, got up.

"Why—er—I don't see how I can," he replied, hesitating. "I'll gladly give money"—

"Money!" she burst out. "You have always said that the only way to help the poor was to love them."

"Yes, yes." His voice was impatient. "But, you see, there's that bakers' strike. I may be called up on the phone at any moment. I must stay here. Serious interests are at stake."

Margaret grew indignant. She stepped to the door, crossed the hall and knocked.

"Wait!" Philip said in astonishment, following her. "What are you going to do?"

"I am going to call Mr. Haggleton."

"You know who he is?"

"Yes."

She opened the door of the living apartment in answer to the call from within and said:

"Will you come out here a moment, Mr. Haggleton? You, too, Mr. Gentle, please?"

Haggleton and Gentle entered, an inquiry on their faces.

Margaret stepped between Haggleton and Philip, looking from one to the other.

"Phil," she said in a ringing voice, "for the last time choose between him and me!"

An idea struck Gentle.

"The battle is on," he said.

"What battle, Gentle?" asked Philip, but it was Margaret who answered him.

"The battle for you, Philip—the battle between your better self and your baser nature. I want you to speak out, Phil, right from your soul and say what you think of—Mr. Haggleton's life."

Philip was puzzled. "What has Mr. Haggleton's life to do with us?"

"More than you dream of, Phil." Her voice was steady.

"I like him."

"But what do you think of his business methods?"

"If you put it that way," he said—"why, I don't."

"Ah!"

Margaret's cry sounded glad.

Haggleton sat down at his desk and looked up at the young man.

"What is it you do not approve of in my business methods?"

"It's the old thing, monopoly and bribery and rebates. Why go into it all again?"

"Go on!" commanded Margaret.

Philip obeyed.

"You know very well, Mr. Haggleton," he continued, "that you and a dozen other men practically own this republic."

"No. Listen to me. No big work has ever been done in this world without leaders, and when a man delivers the goods he's entitled to the reward. Well, we have delivered the goods in this country."

Then, fixing his eyes on Philip, he resumed:

"Go over to Europe. They'll tell you that the United States is the greatest nation on earth, and it is. Why is it? Because the men you call robbers and grafters have organized things—railroads, industries, banks, everything."

"You have broken the law," said Gentle.

"You haven't been honest," added Margaret.

"Honest?" Haggleton smiled grimly. "We have kept to the standard of average honesty of this country, and no man can succeed in business who keeps above it. The faults of America's industrial leaders are the faults of the American people.

"You say we break the law, Mr. Gentle," he continued. "Well, we do. But who doesn't? Give the average American citizen an automobile and watch him break the speed law. Let a policeman stop him and see the flash of a ten dollar bill. That's bribery.

"Watch the average American woman back from Paris with a lot of new dresses. Does she smuggle them in? Well, watch her!

"I tell you, the only law anybody respects is custom. What does the average American citizen do when he wants a drink in a prohibition state? He breaks the law and gets the drink. And the average American woman when she tells the conductor how old her little boy is? She's a good mother and all that, but she'd let Jimmy ride on a half fare ticket until he had whiskers if she could."

Haggleton rose. He was reaching the direct personal application of his argument, the real point toward which he had been working.

"When it comes to business," he summed up, "the average American citizen does in a small way exactly what we do in a big way. Give him a chance to crush a rival and see how quick he'll take it."

He turned suddenly on Philip.

"What have you been doing to those opposition bakers?"

Philip was taken aback.

"Why," he stammered, "I"—

"You have done in a small way what I have done in a big way," said Haggleton for him. "There you are. You had to. And remember this, you reformers, the way to improve things is to raise the standard of honesty of the American people."

Gentle brought the conversation back to its immediate personal bearing.

"All that is not to the point," he asserted. "Would you do as Mr. Haggleton has done?"

"Certainly not," Philip's answer came promptly. "I won't lead that kind of life."

"But you say that you are going into business," argued Margaret.

"Yes, but I am not going to be a railroad president or a trust magnate."

The situation was growing tense. Haggleton kept himself well in hand. "Suppose you were called upon to be the head of a great railroad or a trust?" asked Gentle.

Haggleton judged the moment ripe.

"If you had important interests in trust, Philip," he asked in his usual clear, incisive way, "would you protect them or would you sacrifice them?"

"I would protect them."

"Would you be dishonest?" persisted Gentle.

Haggleton reshaped the question.

"Would you cripple your business by refusing to allow practices sanctioned by custom?"

"Dishonest practices," Margaret put in swiftly—"would you, Phil?"

But Philip was bewildered now.

"I—I don't know," he stammered. "It isn't fair to ask such questions."

Margaret despaired.

"My poor boy!" she said.

Then, turning to Gentle:

"I am not going to be silent any longer."

Gentle made as if to restrain Margaret, but Haggleton nodded. He was ready for the disclosure and its consequences.

"I am going to do the last thing I can to prove my love for you, Philip," she said. "I am going to see to it that you know the truth; then I am going back to my work."

"You are not going to marry me?"

"No, dear; I cannot."

"But why? There is some mystery here."

He glanced at Gentle, at Haggleton and Margaret.

"Tell me!" he pleaded. "What is it?"

She took a step forward, saying:

"Philip, Mr. Haggleton is your father."

CHAPTER XVIII.

MORAN FINDS HIS MAN.

THE young man started violently. His father!

This, then, was the mystery of his parentage, which Gentle had known so long. But Margaret—how did she know?

But, then, was it true? Neither Gentle nor Haggleton had volunteered to affirm the statement. A doubt came to him. "My name is Philip Ames, is it not?" he asked Gentle.

The old diver answered, "Your name is Philip Haggleton."

So it was true. Suddenly he began to see clear. Much that had puzzled him was explained, though as much again remained obscure.

"So that's why you are leaving me, Margaret?" he asked. "That's why you will not marry me?"

He was in love, deeply in love. He did not stop to realize what he gained; he only appreciated what he would lose! Margaret would not marry him!

He turned to his father.

"What reason had you," he asked sternly, "for not telling me that I am your son?"

"Because, Philip, I wanted you to know me as a man before you knew me as a father."

Margaret interposed.

"Was that your only reason, Mr. Haggleton?" she asked severely. "Didn't something happen in your first talk with Mr. Gentle?"

Philip, anxious to probe to the bottom of this mystery, acted upon her suggestion.

"Did something happen, Gentle?" he asked.

"Yes, Philip, something happened."

"Some wrong has been done, and Mr. Gentle knows it," persisted Margaret.

"Whatever wrong there was," said the old diver impressively, "will be atoned for nobly. Your father, Philip, will put aside $10,000,000 for a splendid campaign against poverty."

"So that's how he managed you, Mr. Gentle!" cried Margaret, tears of defeat in her eyes.

"One moment," cried Haggleton in that crisp, penetrating voice of his, which commanded attention.

"Philip," he went on, "you have said that you did not want to judge any man. Now listen well. Can you understand a man doing something under sudden temptation that he regrets afterward?"

"Yes, I can."

"Can you understand that there might be some one whom this man loved very much who would suffer pain—needless pain—if told what he had done? Can you understand that?"

"Yes," said Philip once more, glancing at Margaret, "I can."

"That's not the case," interrupted the girl. "This is it: Your mother deprived you of your name and birthright. That was a monstrous crime unless she had justification. You can understand that?"

"You are right, Miss Lawrence," admitted Gentle, suddenly convinced.

"For his mother's sake," he continued, turning to Haggleton, "I'm sorry, but—here, Philip."

He drew from his pocket the incriminating document in its envelope and handed it to the young man.

"Is this something I ought to read?" he asked of his old friend.

"In my opinion, no. That's why I have kept it from you. But if you insist"—

"I don't insist."

Haggleton was waiting, watching breathlessly.

Philip made a movement as if to return the envelope to Gentle, who refused to take it with a gesture.

"Think of your mother, Philip," implored Margaret.

Haggleton saw on the young man's face that he had won.

"My mother is dead," said Philip softly. "I have a right to think a little of my father."

"Philip!"

"You know I love you, Margaret," his son went on, with wistful tenderness. "Whatever you do, wherever you go, I shall always love you—always. I love Gentle too. He has been a father to me. I trust him. He knows the secret of this paper; you don't. He can judge, and," with a sudden rush of appeal, "let me do my duty, dear, as I feel it. I must."

He went over to the stove, threw the envelope and its secret into the glowing coals.

The flames died down, leaving an oblong of black ashes, curling at the corners, rapidly turning to a whitish gray.

"I have tried to save you, Philip," she said sadly, "and I have failed. I am going."

"Do not go yet, Miss Lawrence," Haggleton was saying. "You started this trouble; now you will see it through."

"It is all very well to burn that statement," he went on with great deliberation, "but you cannot burn the memory of it, Philip. It would always come between you and me—always. I am going to tell you what was in that paper. It was an order I wrote over my own signature that an opposition oil refinery should be destroyed."

"Heavens!" Philip exclaimed. "A crime! Ah, that is why my mother left you!"

He buried his face in his hands and moved toward Margaret at the closed door.

"We were desperate," went on the father. "Our whole business future depended on our getting control of the field. We had to remove that opposition. We tried to buy them out. We made them generous offers, but that stubborn fool Lawrence"—

Margaret rushed forward.

"Stop!" she cried. "You are speaking of my father."

"I beg your pardon," said Haggleton simply.

The words of his beloved had torn down the last veil that hung between Philip's eyes and the secret. His mother—the crime—Margaret! Ah, yes, retribution and the sins of the fathers!

He staggered a little, groping blindly for support.

"Her father," he moaned, "and I am this man's son."

Haggleton decided swiftly.

"There is no use making this out worse than it is," he said coldly. "I am sorry for what I did. I will do whatever you think is right in the matter."

"Whatever I think is right?" asked Philip in surprise. He thought a moment deeply, then asked:

"How much were you worth when you committed this crime—a million—half a million?"

"Possibly. But what is your idea in asking me that?"

"I thought," replied Philip reflectively, "that we might consider some part of your fortune as honestly earned and give back the rest."

"To whom?"

"To those who earned it—the people."

"Have you any idea how rich I am?"

"You are to keep half a million. The rest you will give back."

"Do you think that I will do such a crazy thing?" shouted Haggleton.

Philip remained unmoved.

"I am not setting myself up as your judge, but I can dispose of my life and decide about my conduct. And I tell you that I will not be known as the consenting son of a man whose riches have come from a crime. You can keep all your fortune; you need not give back a penny of it, but you cannot have me under the same roof with you!"

"I thought you a son to be proud of!" Haggleton shouted. "I worked hard to gain your confidence and affection, but you are a prig and a fool! I came down here and lived with you, I was ready to learn from you, and all that you have taught me is that you are just as ignorant and selfish as all reformers!"

The millionaire turned to Margaret.

"If you were not selfish," he said, with ominous calm, "you would follow that boy through anything—through weakness, through wickedness. The worse the father the closer you would stick to the son."

He paused a moment.

"But you are a reformer," he went on, with infinite scorn. "He is tempted by money, and you clear your skirts of him as my wife did of me. He can go to the devil if he likes. Heavens, girl, if that's the way saints love give me sinners!"

"Don't speak to her like that!" commanded Philip.

"No? Very well, then, I will speak to you. You have had the greatest opportunity a foolish dreamer ever wasted. Go tell your starving tenement friends that John J. Haggleton offered them $10,000,000, and you refused it for them!"

He looked around the room, took up his hat and concluded, with a dry laugh in his throat:

"And this is the end of the experiment!"

Moran, half drunk, insane with rage and grief, rushed in, dragging behind him his daughter in her cheap finery, terrified and looking ghastly under the paint on her cheeks.

"Now, then," he thundered, "you wait! I found her in that Tenderloin dive. There is more of your devil's work, Jackson!"

"You're crazy!"

"Who made me crazy?" bellowed Moran. "John J. Haggleton did! He ruined my little business in the west; he killed my wife in this foul tenement of his! By the eternal, if I had him here I—I would show him."

Haggleton turned upon him.

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH HOME

THE business man should have his home connected with the telephone system. There is seldom a day when it will not be a great convenience, either for a message from him to his family, or from home to office. There are so many little emergencies, such as a friend to dinner, things needed from town, etc., which a two-minute conversation will settle.

The universal development of the Bell System enables him to talk daily with his family, whether he be at his office, or miles away in another city.

GOOD TO REMEMBER

METHOD OF "SETTING" COLORS IN WASH GOODS.

Ounce of Sugar of Lead Dissolved in Pailful of Water Recommended —Dainty Idea That Comes from Germany.

"Setting" Colors in Wash Goods.—Alum in the rinsing water will keep green from fading. Linen suits and shirtwaists should be washed in hay water (made by pouring boiling water over hay), and they will keep their color for a long time. One ounce of sugar of lead dissolved in a pailful of water will set almost any color, and is especially good for blue prints. Soak the goods for two or three hours and let dry in the shade before washing with soap and water. Do not try to boil the tinted or figured goods, and do not use washing soda or strong soaps when washing them. If they are much soiled a handful of salt thrown into the water will set the colors. Use warm or nearly cold water in which to soak these things. It is much better than hot water, and the dirt loosens quite as readily. Use ox-gall for setting the color in gray or brown goods, and vinegar in place of salt to set colors in black, purple and heliotrope.

The Hausfrau Useful.—An idea hailing from Germany is one which the dainty housekeeper will welcome. It is an idea for the beautifying of the bathroom, and one which housekeepers may find of interest, called the Berlin hausfrau. This is a piece of linen, shaped like a large towel, which is thrown over the used and unused towels on a rack. A smaller piece of linen to match it is made to cover the wash rags. These linens vary, of course, as to decoration, some of them being very ornate and having a border design which is duplicated in all the linen used in the room such as the stand cover, or, if the bath be connected with a bedroom, in the dresser covers, bed spreads, inner curtains for the wardrobes, and so on. Some of these designs are worked in sampler fashion, in cross stitch, and those in poster effects are especially telling.

Sprinkling Clothes.—If for any reason you have not sprinkled your clothes the night before you wish to iron them, try sprinkling them with boiling hot water. Use a clean whisk broom, as it sprinkles them much finer and evener than by dipping the water in your hand. As soon as your clothes are sprinkled, and tightly rolled up, put on your irons to heat. By the time they are hot your clothes will be ready to iron as nicely as if they had lain over night. Always iron the linens last, as they require more dampness.

Trifles from Tissue Paper.—Women who are deft with their hands can make all manner of trifles for the house out of tissue paper. Among the serviceable articles thus made are table mats, to slip under hot dishes. They are composed of strips of tissue paper braided, like the old-fashioned braided mats. A piece of cardboard is the foundation. Glove and handkerchief cases, sachets and many other things for the dressing table are made of flowered tissue paper, and are very pretty.

Sweet Sour Plum Preserves.

Take German plums, wipe each plum with a cloth, prick each plum three or four times with a needle. Boil vinegar, put in cloves, stick cinnamon and granulated sugar to suit taste, and pour boiling vinegar over the plums. Next day pour off vinegar and when it begins to boil pour over your plums; pour off your vinegar the third time and when it begins to boil put in a few plums at a time and boil until they just start to burst; take your plums as they begin to burst and put in stone crock; last of all pour on your boiling vinegar until covered; put a plate and cloth on top of plums; then cover; don't need to be air tight. Excellent.

Cauliflower with Sauce.

Cut a fine, large cauliflower into several pieces after removing the outer leaves. Boil in salt and water until done through. Drain and lay on hot, buttered toast. In a hot frying pan mix a tablespoonful of butter and one of flour, add a cupful of meat stock and six or more of finely chopped mushrooms. Cook ten minutes longer, take off the stove and beat in the whipped yolks of three eggs, a pinch of salt, a dash of pepper and grated nutmeg, and the juice of a lemon. Pour over the cauliflower and serve immediately.

For Serving Corn.

A new addition to table service is known as the green corn server.

It is an individual dish for corn.

It is a low, long dish, just large enough for a single ear of corn.

It is shaped like a miniature horse-trough and set on low ball feet.

With it go a pair of silver holders, by which the corn is carried to the mouth.

The holders look like daggers and are stuck through the ends of the ear.

A set of these should make a most acceptable wedding present, particularly while they are so new.

Scrambled Fish.

Beat up three eggs, add one tablespoonful of cream or milk, season with pepper and salt. Melt two ounces of butter in a stewpan and to this add two or three ounces of flaked fish (any white fish free from skin and bone will do), fry for a few seconds and then add the eggs. Stir well over the fire until the mixture thickens and serve very hot, piled up on pieces of hot buttered toast.

GIRLS AND MUSICIANS.

"The late Paul Stanley, composer of 'Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay,' took no great pride in that song's success," said a San Francisco musician. "He had hoped to succeed as a composer of grand opera.

"When he lived here he often talked wth a quaint kind of melancholy about the high ambitions of his youth, and how they had become humbler as he got older.

"'A man's ambitions dwindle,' he once said, 'like a girl's matrimonial aims. At 16 a girl wants a fairy prince and nothing less. At 20 she is resigned to a millionaire duke. At 25 a members of congress is good enough. At 30 a country minister will do nicely, and at 35 she'll take anything, from a song-writer down.'"

Worse Than a Hired Man.

"Yeas," drawled the postmaster of Bacon Ridge, "that's old Zeb White, the laziest man in the state."

"In what way is he so lazy?" asked the coffee salesman.

"Why, every Sunday he takes the two chickens they are going to have for dinner and ties them as near to the pike as possible."

"H'm! What is that for?"

"So the racing automobiles will whiz their feathers off and he won't have the trouble of picking them."

Hard on the Receiver.

"No," drawled the mayor of the far-western settlement, "the boys had some money tied up in that thar bankrupt telephone company an' they just didn't like the way the receiver was handling the business."

"Didn't eh?" commented the tourist. "Well, what did they do about it?"

"Oh, they just hung up the receiver."

Logical Deduction.

"I suppose," remarked the thoughtful thinker, "that when women get to voting it will boom your business."

"Why do you think so?" queried the unsuspecting druggist.

"Because," explained tha t. t., "it will give the political situation a different complexion."

Weather Notes.

"Does the wind blow this way all the time?" asked a stranger in Wichita the other day, as he jammed his hat over his ears and hung onto the rest of his clothes to keep them from being blown off.

"Oh, no," replied a native, "it blows the other way a good deal of the time.

"Science seems to be puzzled by the strange beast recently captured by Mr. Roosevelt."

BURLESQUE FIELD OF HONOR

Mimic Dueling, with Wax Bullets, Popular in England and on the Continent.

Mimic pistol dueling, now popular in England and on the continent, has become possible through the invention of Dr. Devillers of wax bullets with cartridges to fit the modern French dueling pistol and the regulation army revolver. The cartridge is fitted with a cap which contains a sufficient charge to insure accuracy of fire, and the projectile strikes the object at which it is aimed with considerable force. The combatants, however, wear wire masks with thick glass to protect the eyes, and they are attired in long, loose coats, for the protection of the body and limbs. Affixed to the pistol in front of the trigger is a steel shield for the hand.

Pistol dueling is a sport in which physical fitness and self-discipline are essential to success. It is necessary to be a good shot and something more, for there is a considerable difference between taking a deliberate aim at a fixed target and shooting at an armed opponent at the word of command within a period of a second and a half. In these mimic duels the ceremony of a "serious affair" is observed. There is a director of assaults, a judge to decide which of the competitors fired first, and four "markers" to judge the hits.

Competitors are placed at 25 paces from each other—a distance of 22 yards. They stand with their pistols pointing downward clear of the feet and butt touching the thigh or knee. The director gives the word "Fire," and while he counts, one, two, three, the combatants raise their weapons and fire. If a competitor raises his pistol before the word of command, or if he fires after the word "three," the result of his shot is nullified.

Mr. Watterson Writes of London.

How many "Mrs. Bouncers" have I not known in London, with nearly 50 years of intimate knowledge of every part of it; for I have lived in Bloomsbury, as well as Belgravia; in Berkley square and Mount street and Piccadilly; and I know Billingsgate and Houndsditch almost as well as Tottenham court road and the region around the Elephant and Castle. My first "Mrs. Bouncer!" She is in heaven now, bless her dear old soul! That was in Jermyn street, 58. It is all gone long ago; in its place big, burly skyscrappers stunted in their growth, just off St. James street, where White's and Crockford's were, and the sports of a hundred years ago danced to the giddy mazes of Lou and Hazzard when they were not playing for larger stakes in the palaces about Whitehall and Holland house, in which the heiresses displayed their charms and their rent rolls. What snowballs of pillows and bolsters; what chops and potatoes; and how good old "Bouncer" was to her Babes in the Wood! I can still hear the chimes of St. James chapel ring out the hours, and, when the milkman's bell rang of a morning, the joke was, "There's the queen again, and we not dressed yet!"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Famous Precious Stones.

The romance of precious stones is of absorbing interest, for many world-known gems have strange histories connected with them. The Cullinan diamond takes its name from T. M. Cullinan, who was born at Queenstown, Cape Colony. For many years he knew that diamonds existed on the Elandsfontein farm, which belonged to a Boer named Prinsloo, but he had to wait until after the Boer war before he could purchase the land. The Premier mine was first opened and the great Cullinan diamond was discovered there. It is three times larger than any diamond found before, and its subsequent presentation to King Edward VII. is well known. The Orloff diamond originally belonged to Empress Catherine of Russia, and it was given to her by Count Orloff. The diamond was stolen from the eye of an Indian idol, and an enormous price was paid for it. Catherine placed the "Orloff" in the imperial scepter of Russia, where it still remains—a wonderful stone, as big as a walnut, and perfect in purity and color.

A Roundabout Donation.

An Indiana woman found one evening that she was short of kerosene for the evening lamp. As she could not depend on the slow delivery of the grocer's boy she took her oil can and started for the nearest grocery. On the way she met a neighbor who asked:

"Well, what are you going to do? Of all things, you carrying an oil can!"

"Why, don't get excited, my dear; I'm out on an errand of charity."

"How is that?" the neighbor wanted to know.

"Oh, I'm merely going to donate three cents to the Chicago university."

Lieut. Shackleton as Talker.

People whom Lieut. Shackleton casually meets must be a trial to him with their trivial qustions, but he has a merry wit. He was explaining how the penguins set up nest keeping. Mr. Penguin would feed his wife as she sat on the eggs. He brought her prawns and the like, carrying them in his gullet into which she dipped her beak. "Are the birds monogamic?" asked the naturalist present. "That we could not determine," replied the Great Iceman. "We frequently saw a male penguin feed another bird's wife, but we could not say whether his motives were absolutely disinterested."

THE LAINGS' FOREBEARS

Interesting Details of the Early "Silent Communion" and Quaker Family.

HE CAME HERE IN YEAR 1685.

His Descendants Founded the Friends Meeting House on Watchung Avenue.

An interesting account of the Laing family whose history is now agitating the country, will be found in the following lines from the pen of Oliver B. Leonard, the local historian:

The first of this historic line settling in this section of New Jersey was a Scotch farmer, John Laing. He came from the county of Aberdeen in 1685, sailing in Captain Voorse's vessel which landed its passengers at Perth Amboy in August of that year. There accompanied him his wife, Margaret, their sons, John, Jr., William, Abraham and daughters Isabel and Christiana. After four years experience along the salt water frontage, he moved inland about December, 1689. He bought a farm a few miles nearer to what is now South Plainfield and on this plantation spent the closing days of his earthly life. He died in 1698 and his wife administered his estate, surviving him some twelve years and coninuing to live at the homestead until her children were all married.

The family had emigrated to the Jerseys, with many other English and Scotch Quakers, in response to liberal invitations from the new owners of the soil and government of East Jersey. The whole of this province had been purchased in 1682 by a real estate syndicate of Friends, headed by the distinguished William Penn. Before the close of the seventeenth century scores of people of the same religious faith and nationality were induced to emigrate thither. The liberal principles and tolerant laws of East Jersey led multitudes of other religionists to settle here also, who had been persecuted for conscience sake, among whom were many Baptists and Covenanters.

The progenitors of the Laings were ardent advocates of the "Silent Communion" and were foremost as founders of the first Quaker meeting in Perth Amboy, established 1686. The son, John Laing, Jr., became an active and valuable member of the Society of Friends in Woodbridge, and the prime mover in organizing our Plainfield Quaker Meeting a generation afterward. This oldest son (John Laing, Jr.), married in 1705 Elizabeth Shotwell, daughter of Abraham, of Elizabethtown, the outspoken citizen and independent freeholder, who had his property confiscated in 1675 for maintaining the interests of the people against the East Jersey Proprietaries. John Laing, Jr., was the father of twelve children and brought them up in the religion of his parents. The names of his five sons and seven daughters were John, David, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Sarah, Elizbaeth, Margaret, Anna, Martha, Mary and Christiana. Their intermarriage with the Vails, Thorns, Edgars, Wilsons, Smiths and others added largely to the peace loving and industrious neighborhood. Most all of them settled in and about Plainfield and were ardent, exemplary members of the Society of Friends.

It was in 1721 that a few of these Friends, belonging to the Woodbridge Meeting, were authorized to hold weekly meetings at the house of John Laing, Jr. Subsequently in 1731-36 after his death in 1728, a meeting house 24 feet square was built on a plot of ground given by him for the purpose. This was known as the "Plainfield Meeting in the woods." It was here the Laings and Websters and many other families of familiar names in this region of the country met for worship till increasing numbers required larger accommodations, when in 1787-88 they erected their present meeting house on Watchung avenue.

John Laing, Jr., and his brother, William, bought of John Barclay December 23, 1699, an extensive tract of 720 acres. This was part of the large patent taken out by Barclay in 1685 and extended nearly to the present southeasterly boundary of the city of Plainfield. It was in the description of this tract that "Plainfield" as a localized section is first mentioned, the plantation being located between South Plainfield and this city, but all in Middlesex county. The town name was again referred to in the early minutes of our Quaker meeting when recording the birth of the second child of John Laing, Jr. "Elizabeth—born att Plainfield ye 11th of ye 10th month, 1707." A little over two hundred years is a pretty long time to hold such a common name in a new country as "Plainfield."

HEAVENLY REST MEN'S CLUB GAINS MEMBERS

At the regular business meeting of the Men's Association of the Church of the Heavenly Rest held last night most encouraging reports of the work of the various officers were read and the entertainment committee gave an outline of their program for an entertainment to be held next January. Judging from the talent engaged for this occasion it will be a memorable one in the history of the club.

Six new members were added to the roll last night. They were Thos. De Meza, Charles Ludgate, Charles Lewis, O. Angleman, A. B. Drake and Alexander Doyg. These additions bring the total membership up to 94. Thursday night, December 9, will be devoted to the women, wives and friends of the members. This marks a new departure in the club's plans.

It was decided to open the parish house every Thursday evening instead of twice a month as has been the custom, so that the members may have ample time each week for social enjoyment, reading, etc. William Ochiltree and Samuel Kriney were appointed a reception committee to act during the month of December.

There will be music by a full orchestra. Continued interest is being shown in the membership contest and another list of applicants is looked for within a short time. During the good and welfare a smoker was enjoyed. Officers will be elected at the annual meeting on December 10.

METHODISTS CELEBRATE

First Brotherhood Banquet a Success—Will Be an Annual Feature.

REV. LYNN HOUGH SPEAKER.

Followed by Rev. Dr. A. W. Hayes of Westfield, and Samuel S. Swackhamer.

Members and guests of the Methodist Brotherhood to the number of fifty enjoyed a banquet and some fine oratory in Vincent chapel last night. The principal speaker was the Rev. Lynn Hough (pronounced Hoff) pastor of the Sumerfield Methodist church, of Brooklyn. Rev. A. W. Hayes, pastor of the Methodist church, of Westfield, and Samuel S. Swackhamer, of this city, also spoke. It was the first banquet of the Brotherhood since its organization and it is proposed to make it an annual fixture.

It was expected that Rev. Dr. McCrea, former pastor of the first Methodist church, would address the gathering, but he was in Carlisle, Pa., and could not reach here in time. Rev. Mr. Hough was introduced by toastmaster Henry A. McGee, of North Plainfield, who had been previously introduced by Nelson A. Miller, president of the Brotherhood.

Rev. Mr. Hough told of the appeal which Christ makes to men and among other things said that a modern preacher would find it a difficult thing to keep David in his church in these peculiar days of advanced thought and remarkable morals. Although David was a type of virile man, virility was best exemplified in Jesus. He could command the attention and bring fear to any with whom he came in touch and he was human from every viewpoint. The winsomness of women appealed to Him and the women were attracted to Him by His great personality. It was compelling while appealing.

Peter, he said, represents the masses multiplied, which was the obstacle to be overcome by the Brotherhood. If the members had followed the indomitable purpose of the Saviour it would have vindicated itself a hundred fold long before now. It was not the hatred of the Romans nor of the Jews which brought Jesus to the cross but His own premeditated purpose and only to bring by His suffering men closer to Him. A man wants a master more than anything else. There is that indefinable longing which every man knows; a hunger for something greater than himself, a sort of hero worship and this feeling can only come from God. Man's aim should be to keep the virile, red blooded man as pure as the innocent child which memory will always recall to his mind.

Rev. Dr. Hayes took the Brotherhood as his theme for a powerful appeal to the men of the church to go out and seek other men men who hate the church because they do not know her. He told of the splendid work done in his former pastorate in Binghamton where the Sabbath was made a Sabbath in reality through the federation of all the men's clubs of the churches in that city. The greatest work which a man can do is to make his fellow feel the need of a brother, and to help save whatever part of his fellowman that he can.

Samuel S. Swackhamer spoke along the line of brotherhood work in the temperance cause, urging the men to hang close together and work for the elimination of laws which allow for the inroads of the saloon upon society. The men's clubs of the cities could do more to correct this evil than any other combination. Mr. Swackhamer was very humorous in the early part of his speech and some of his jokes were rich.

Those at the speakers' table were Rev. Dr. Anderson, Rev. Lynn Hough, Rev. Ora J. Shoop, S. S. Swackhamer, Rev. Charles S. Kemble, Rev. A. W. Hayes, Henry A. McGee, Rev. Dr. George H. Whitney, James W. Jackson and Nelson A. Miller.

No Invitations This Year.

The annual memorial service under the auspices of Plainfield Lodge, No. 885, B. P. O. E., will be held at the Plainfield theatre Sunday evening, December 5. This year no invitations will be sent out, and the general public is invited to attend.

Reunion of St. Mary's Alumnae.

There will be a special reunion of the alumnae of Mount St. Mary's College tomorrow afternoon at 2:30. It is expected that there will be a large attendance, especially from out of town.

John Nicholls, of Hotel Kensington, has returned after spending the Thanksgiving holidays with relatives at Wilkesbarre.

LEW WILTSE MAY PILOT NEW BRUNSWICK NINE

Lew Wiltse, former National and American League pitcher, a former resident of this city, was in town this morning. Wiltse, it is learned, is in line to succeed Dave Driscoll as manager and owner of the New Brunswick team next season. Wiltse, who has been on the payroll of the Syracuse team, of the New York State League for the past two seasons, has about decided to give up the professional life, and devote the rest of his ball playing days as an independent magnate.

Wiltse, who is wintering at Somerville, received a proposition from several prominent New Brunswick men to take hold of the game in that city, and he is now considering the matter. The season in the Middlesex county seat was a big success financially last season, when Driscoll and his partners were said to have cleared close to $3,000 in profits.

PARK CLUB MEMBERS ENJOY A NOVEL DANCE

The Thanksgiving dance at the Park club, last night, was one of the most novel affairs of the kind ever given at the club and was largely attended. The decorations consisting of a farm-house, a turkey, pig and goat, together with cornstalks, jack-o-lanterns, etc., all appropriate to the harvest season, were arranged about the stage, presenting a picturesque scene.

The feature of the evening was a barn dance contest. Each couple was numbered and they were given turns in dancing, it being left to the patronesses to decide which couple was entitled to the prize, which was the turkey. The dance finally ended in a tie between Miss Marion Hall and Jack Van Deventer and Miss Elizabeth McGee and William Flanders. It being impossible to decide between the two couple, the turkey was presented to them, the inference being that they will give a dinner party.

The patronesses, who acted as judges were Mrs. Robert H. McCutcheon, Mrs. Augustus V. Heely, Mrs. George T. Rogers, Mrs. Samuel Townsend, Mrs. W. Vaughn McGee and Mrs. H. A. McGee.

During an intermission refreshments consisting of pumpkin pie, crullers, apples and cider were served by Steward Henry Johnson. The affair was concluded at an early hour this morning. The next social event at the club will be the Christmas dance on December 27.

RESULTS OF HARVEST HOME FESTIVAL.

At the regular meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary Board of Muhlenberg Hospital held yesterday morning, most satisfactory reports were read of the very generous donations to the Harvest Home Festival in the interest of the hospital which was held last week at the Nurses' Home. The articles which were donated were displayed in the storeroom of the hispital and the shelves bore evidence of the generosity of those interested in supplies for the coming year.

The donation from the Needlework Guild comprised more than 1,100 articles. The following schools sent generous contributions: St. Mary's, Whittier, Lincoln, Irving, Bryant, Mount St. Mary's, Scotch Plains, Hartridge, Seminary, Leal's School, Drake Business College, Plainfield Business College, Watchung and North Plainfield. Besides the abundant supplies of edibles and wearables $150 in money was received.

Probationer Broke a Window.

Clifford Locke, a West End boy, who was one of the squad of probationers to report to City Judge Runyon at the session of court, was fined five dollars for wrecking a shutter and window in a house near his home with a large stone. The other seven boys who reported with him said they had been good for the week. Locke was detained at police headquarters until his fine was paid by his father.

Tuberculosis Pavilion to Open.

The Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis will open its new pavilion on the grounds of Muhlenberg Hospital on Tuesday afternoon, November 30, with a "Pound Party." All who are interested are invited to come to see the new building and bring a pound of sugar, salt, tea, coffee, cereal, flour or rice to help fill the larder for the winter. Tea will be served from 3 to 6 o'clock.

BIG FAIR OPENS TONIGHT

Societies of St Mary's Parish Unite for Convent Fund.

MANY ATTRACTIVE FEATURES.

Bazar Will Continue for One Week—Two Afternoons Reserved for Children.

St. Mary's fair and bazar, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the fund for the erection of a new convent, will open tonight in St. Mary's asembly rooms, formerly the Washington public school. The bazar will continue for one solid week and will be concluded one week from tonight. Tuesday and Friday afternoons have been reserved for the children, at which time the leading attractions will be Punch and Judy shows and sleight of hand exhibitions.

Work in completing the decorations and the erection of the various booths was finished today. The committees in charge have arranged several unique features for every evening. Fancy articles, household articles and holiday presents will be offered for sale at moderate prices.

Three large booths will be in commission, one booth being assigned to two societies which are paired as follows: Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies' Auxiliary; T. A. B. Society and Young Ladies' Sodality, and the Knights of Columbus and Children of Mary. There will also be a refreshment stand which will be supervised by members of the Ladies' Sewing Circle with Mrs. McElvoy in charge.

Supervising the A. O. H. Ladies' Auxiliary will be John Gallagher and Miss McCue; Knights of Columbus—Children of Mary, Timothy J. Meaney and John Curain and wives of members; T. A. B. Society—Young Ladies' Sodality, Michael D. O'Keefe and Miss Mary A. Smith. The managers of each department will have a corps of assistants.

The decorative schemes for the booths are blue and white for the T. A. B. Society; green and white for the A. O. H. while pink and white is the color for the K. of C department. The interior of the hall is profusely adorned with national flags and bunting, while at the A. O. H. booth, a large American flag and the emblem of Erin will attract the attention of all.

The installation of hundreds of electric bulbs was also completed this morning and electric signs will indicate the names of each department.

In addition to the larger booths there will be a pop corn department in charge of Miss Gilligan and Miss Elsie Knowlton will preside at an orange tree which will provide surprise gifts for its patrons.

Without doubt the bazar will eclipse any similar event in the history of St. Mary's parish. All of the leading societies have united their efforts and Father Bogan is confident that a substantial sum will be realized which will permit the breaking of ground for the new convent early in the spring.

The plans for the erection of the convent were chronicled exclusively in The Daily Press three weeks ago. The structure will probably cost close to $20,000, and it will occupy a site either at the corner of Liberty and Sixth street, or in the vacant plot that adjoins the assembly hall, corner of Washington and Liberty streets.

Cramer, of the First Reformed church, Somerville, and Rev. Mr. Culp, of Bound Brook, officiated. The burial was in the Bound Brook cemetery. Mrs. Neuman was survived by five children, three sons, Adam, Peter and Louis Neuman, residing here.

WM. E. BARTLE SUES J. K. BARNHART & SON

Because John K. Barnhart & Son, contractors for stone work on the Washington School, cancelled a contract for some building stone ordered through William E. Bartle, a local contractor, the latter has started suit for damages for breach of contract and has retained Judge Isaac P. Runyon as his attorney. Bartle's contract was for about $2,000 worth of stone.

It is claimed that the violation of Bartle's contract with the Trenton firm was caused by an attempt to use a different kind of stone from that specified by the architect. Barnhart & Son contracted with the local stone man for rock-faced stone, but at the time the contract called for smooth-faced stone. Later the specifications were changed, and Indiana lime stone was used. Bartle claims that as soon as the Trenton contractor found out that the rock-faced stone for which he had contracted could not be used, he cancelled the contract.

The suit will be tried at the Somerset county court in the December term. Linton Satterthwait, of Trenton, has been retained as counsel by Barnhart & Son.

personal letter congratulating him on his achievement in winning the rifle championship of the United States at Camp Perry in August.

Following is the letter:

"The White House, Washington,
Nov. 22, 1909.

"My Dear Major Martin—I congratulate you most heartily upon winning the title of military rifle champion of the United States for 1909. This title has been bestowed upon you for receiving the high aggregate in the two most important matches of the year—the President's match and the national individual match.

"Efficiency in rifle practice in the Naional Guard and the regular service is fundamentaly necessary to the attainment of soldiery excellence. I am glad that you have shown yourself possessed of this qualification. To win you had to exhibit a higher order of merit than any other contestant. It is the high aggregate which counts most and which shows the most skill.

"Very sincerely yours,
"WILLIAM H. TAFT.

MRS. E. D. WEBSTER DEAD; TO BE BURIED MONDAY.

Mrs. Ellen Butterworth Webster, wife of the late Hon. E. D. Webster, passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Martin I. Cooley, No. 2 Rockview Terrace, early today. Mrs. Webster came to the borough from Washington a few weeks ago. Her husband, who died fifteen years ago, was prominent in public affairs for many years. During the Civil War he served as private secretary under William M. Seward, who was Abraham Lincoln's secretary of war; he also served as consul at Bradford, England, during the administration of former President Johnson. For many years he was also a member of the National Republican committee.

In addition to Mrs. Cooley, the deceased is survived by two other sisters, Mrs. John T. Honeycutt, of West Point, and Mrs. James L. Lusk, of Washington. The funeral service will be conducted at the home of Mrs. Cooley Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Interment will be made at Orchard Park, N. Y.

James E. Martine, of "Cedar Brook Farm," went to Jersey City, today, to attend the funeral of his cousin, Philip Kipp Green, who died on Wednesday, suddenly.

ELECTION A BIT WARM

Dunellen Firemen Turn Down George Day and Elect W. H. Brokaw.

RESULT A BIG SURPRISE.

Company Awards Contract for New Uniforms and Asks for More Hose.

Annual elections in the Dunellen fire department are usually tame affairs, but last night's event was an exception to the general rule. When the members of Defender Company No. 1 assembled last night the horizon was clear and no one except those on "the inside" scented a contest.

Everything went along serenely until nominations were called for representative to the Firemen's Relief Association's annual convention. George W. Day, who has served in that capacity, quite often in the past history of the department, was generally looked on as the only candidate for re-election, and there was quite a ripple of surprise when the names of C. C. Vail and William Brokaw were presented as candidates.

Day was the candidate of the "regulars," and as there were no signs of a contest, he made no effort to secure votes in advance. It is also said that Vail didn't know he was going to be a candidate until nominated, and he consented to remain in the fight. When the surprise over Vail's nomination had receded, there was a still bigger flutter among the fire fighters when the name of Brokaw was presented. The latter's friends had kept their intentions mum until the meeting, and the result was that Brokaw was elected over Day and Vail. All of the other selections which were unanimous, follow:

President, Fowler W. Vail; vice-president, Herbert B. Wyckoff; secretary, Charles H. Dodwell; treasurer, William Wyckoff; auditors, Albert Giddes and Charles H. Starker; doorkeeper, John Stilligers.

Chief, Charles M. Wyhuskey; assistant chief, Walter G. Runyon; foreman, Joseph Maier; first assistant, Harry Shugar; second assistant, William Brokaw; board of visitors of Firemen's Relief Association, H. B. Wyckoff, C. C. Vail and Albert Giddes.

A contract for twentythree uniforms was awarded to the Glenock Woolen Mills, of Somerville. The outfits will be blue in color and white cord stripes to the trousers. They will be delivered before Christmas and the event will be celebrated by holding a smoker. The fair committee reported the profits of the recent bazar as $336. It was out of this fund that the uniforms were purchased.

A discussion on the needs of new hose was held and it was voted to petition the Borough Council to order the purchase of 200 feet of hose.

McIVOR FOUND GUILTY OF VIOLATING AUTOMOBILE LAW

Hugh McIvor, one of the four local chauffeurs, who were on trial in the Union County Court, charged with operating an automobile without the consent of the owner, was the only one of the quartet that was convicted. The jury after a few hours' deliberation yesterday, returned a verdict of guilty in the case of McIvor, and acquitting Walter Kettenring and George Mitchell.

McIvor, it was clearly shown by Assitant Prosecutor Walter L. Hetfield, Jr., was the man who had taken the machine out without the consent or knowledge of the owner. The other men were simply companions of McIvor on the "joy ride." Winfield S. Angleman, who with V. W. Nash, Jr., represented the defendants, made a strong plea for his clients and it was largely through his efforts that three of the men were acquitted. McIvor will be sentenced next Wednesday.

Thanksgiving Musical Service.

There will be a Thanksgiving musical at the First Baptist church tomorrow night. The full chorus choir will present Dr. Ferris Tozer's Harvest cantata entitled "The Two Harvests." This beautiful work was composed by the musical doctor of Oxford, representing the material harvest and the spiritual harvest. A short sermon by Dr. J. A. Chambliss will complete a very entertaining and profitable program. Rev. Dr. Charles L. White occupies the pulpit in the morning. He is one of the most effective preachers in the denomination.

Net Profits $160.

Manager VanZandt, who had charge of the minstrel show given at the Plainfield High School, announces that the net proceeds amounted to $160, the largest amount ever made at a similar entertainment.

ADVERTISE IN THE DAILY PRESS

N. Y. AMUSEMENTS.

"Idols," the dramatic version of William J. Locke's famous novel of the same name, is at the Bijou theatre for a run of indefinite length. The first presentation of "Idols" in America took place a week ago on the road and the producers believe that the play will excel in America its great popularity in England. It was produced in London last season as a vehicle for the stellar ambitions of Miss Evelyn Millard and played a long and very successful engagement at the Garrick Theatre. This season Miss Millard is appearing in the play in the provinces and so popular has it proved that a second company has been sent out in it. "Idols" is the most dramatic of Locke's novels and the only one that lends itself easily to stage purposes.

Frank Daniels in "The Belle of Brittany," under the management of the Messrs. Shubert, at Daly's Theatre, is not only the greatest musical hit in the career of the famous comedian, but also the greatest musical success ever known at Daly's Theatre, excepting none.

Klaw & Erlanger's latest production, "The Silver Star," with Adeline Genee, the dancer, in the leading role, has scored an emphatic success at the New Amsterdam theatre, New York city. The New York Herald's notice is a good average of what the critics thought of the performance. Its critic wrote: "Before the curtain was up on the second act it was rated a 'winner' by the large audience, and when the final curtain fell this same audience left in high feather, pleased that they had seen the premiere. Miss Genee introduced five new dances. The star had lines to speak for the first time here and spoke them very well. But her nimble feet carried the night for her. And it was a triumph for her in every particular. Talk about playing notes—Miss Genee can dance them. 'The Silver Star' likely will be twinkling at the New Amsterdam Theatre when the roses bloom in the spring, tra la."

In spite of the opening of two opera houses and the New Theatre, Mr. Forbes-Robertson as "The Stranger" or "Passer-by," continues to win well deserved attention from crowded houses at Maxine Elliot's Theatre. He is now about to enter upon the third month of his successful stay in that popular play "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," in which he promises to remain throughout the entire season, and has, in consequence, cancelled the offer of two London theatres, where this same play ran for the better part of last year. It will probably be at least twelve months before the distinguished English actor-manager will be allowed to return to his own country, except perhaps for a brief holiday in the summer, at the termination of which he may be persuaded to bring back with him his charming American wife and associate, Miss Gertrude Elliott, who will be assured of a very hearty welcome again on this side of the Atlantic.

The quartet choir of the First Presbyterian church will repeat the special musical service on Wednesday night, December 8, when "The Vision of St. John" will be rendered under the direction of Clifford A. Braider, organist.

The Young Women's Missionary Society held its monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. F. T. Ostrom, of Albert street, yesterday afternoon. "Not Pleasing Self," was the topic of the devotional service in charge of Mrs. J. A. Chambliss.

John R. Mott, leader of the World's Student Missionary Movement, will speak at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church tomorrow morning, and Rev. Dr. E. G. Read, of this city, will preach. There will be an organ recital in the evening from 7:30 to 7:45.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

No less than ten different theatre parties are being arranged for tonight, when Charles Frohman's production of Henri Bernstein's remarkable drama, "The Thief," will be presented at the Plainfield theatre. Many of these parties will be preceded by small dinners so that the occasion of this play's visit to this city will be one of great social activity. Certainly no play which has been offered to local theatre-goers in recent years has aroused a wider interest than the coming of this much discussed drama of modern life. The fact that "The Thief" has to its credit runs of ten months at the Lyceum theatre in New York, three months at the Park theatre in Boston, three months at Power's theatre in Chicago, has only added to the natural interest aroused by a play which is admittedly one of the great dramas of the age.

A complete artistic and elaborate scenic and mechanical presentation of Goethe's immortal work, 'Faust," will be the attraction at the Plainfield theatre Monday night by an excellent company of players. Morrison's "Faust" is standard in this country, and it has never failed to amuse and enthuse theatre-goers. The present production superbly acted by an excellent company of players, is one of the distinct dramatic successes of the current theatrical season.

A marked feature of James Forbes' comedy success, "The Traveling Salesman," which comes to the Plainfield theatre Wednesday night, is the large number of laughable slang expressions, entirely new to those who find much to interest them in the works of the celebrated slang authors of the day. Mr. Forbes as a creator of risible expressions, sprang into prominence by reason of "The Chorus Lady," and has more than duplicated his first success with Bob Blake in "The Travelings Salesman," at Plainfield Theatre, Wednesday night.

"The Traveling Salesman." The production ran an entire season at the Gaiety theatre in New York, four months at the Park theatre in Boston and six months at the Illinois theatre in Chicago to crowded houses.

SOME STATE NEWS BRIEFS

A new gas plant is being installed for the glass works of Whitall-Tatum Company, at Millville, at a cost of $4,000.

Newton Severs, of Willingsborough Township, Burlington county, enjoyed ripe raspberries with his Thanksgiving dinner.

For refusing to show his license while gunning, John Bintliff was arrested by Game Warden Mathias and fined by Justice Stevenson at Beverly.

August Forsell discovered a bee tree near his home at Delanco, and with his two sons gathered twenty-one pounds of honey from it after dark.

Over half a hundred members of Paterson Council, Knights of Columbus, attended a memorial mass for the dead at Our Lady of Lourdas church, Riverside.

Miss Dorothy Ford, daughter of Professor and Mrs. Henry Jones Ford, of Princeton, became the bride of Thomas C. Hildt, of Baltimore, Wednesday, in Trinity church, Princeton.

Instead of getting the usual Thanksgiving gift— a turkey—each of the 1,000 employes of the Standard Underground Cable Company Wednesday received $2.25 extra from the firm with their weekly pay.

John Smith, thirty-one years old, of 1606 South Sixth street, Camden, was treated at Cooper Hospital for lacerations of an eye said by the police to have been sustained in a fight at Broadway and Ferry avenue.

In a fight with a wounded deer, Rudolph Thomas, an Atlantic City hunter, had a narrow escape from death. The man wounded the animal, which turned on Thomas. In the fight which followed he was injured. The deer was finally killed.

Burglars, believed to be youthful thieves, forced an entrance into the Hanover Shoe store, 202 Market street, Paterson, some time Wednesday night or early Thursday morning and stole a large quantity of socks and stockings, bought a few days ago for the holiday trade.

That Auditorium Square, at Asbury Park, is not for sale to that city, was made plain by its owner, James A. Bradley, at a conference which Mayor Appleby held with him recently. Land just to the north of the Brunswick Hotel, Mr. Bradley declared, could be bought by the city.

The firemen's parade held at Gloucester City in celebration of the thirty-fourth anniversary of the Volunteer Fire Department was one of the largest ever held in South Jersey, and twenty-five companies with brass bands and fife and drum corps were in line from all parts of South Jersey and suburbs of Philadelphia.

Henry A. Hettinger is building an aeroplane at Bridgeton which he believes will eclipse other inventions in that field. He is an inventor of gasoline engines, and is head of the Hettinger Engine Company here. He has designed a special engine for the aeroplane and considers it one of the lightest that has yet been produced.

The storm-damaged bridge over Townsend's Inlet tied up traffic over the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad to Stone Harbor, Avalon and Leaming. At the office of the company in Camden it was stated that, while no part of the bridge is down, it is in a weakened condition, and it was deemed best not to permit travel over it.

Beginning with Wednesday evening and concluding yesterday afternoon, Rev. Charles H. Elder, the "marrying parson" of Trenton, and one of the best known preachers of the New Jersey Methodist Conference, established a new record for himself and perhaps left the accomplishments of all competitors far in the rear by marrying seven couples.

Hurrying home to his Thanksgiving dinner, J. B. Borton, of Atlantic City, a Reading Railway track-walker, made a misstep while jumping across the closing draw in the bridge across the meadows. The man's foot was caught in the jaws of the heavy structure and so badly crushed that it had to be amputated at the hospital Thursday night.

Miss Emma Stavitzy's injuries from a dog's bite Wednesday, following the death of Mrs. Goldea Frielander from rabies in a New York hospital, resulted in Vineland streets becoming a dog slaughter-house yesterday. Armed men went about shooting every dog that appeared. The dog that bit Miss Stavitzy was a companion to the one that bit Mrs. Frielander and Miss Stavitzy has been hurried to Pasteur Institute, New York.

Two hunting dogs, one valued at $100, belonging to Summers Cheeseman, and one valued at $300, belonging to Edward Taylor, of Atlantic City, were killed by the third rail on the West Jersey and Seashore electric line Wednesday at Mizpah, while crossing the tracks pursuing a fox. A strange dog that had joined in the chase also met death. The dogs were found piled in top of the heavy charged rail. The hunters failed to get any game.

The Democratic majority in Hoboken's Common Council has passed on first reading a resolution authorizing the Public Service Corporation to build a bridge and loop over Hudson place to connect with the new elevated trolley road terminal. The Public Service had previously refused to pay for the privilege on the ground that ample compensation for the improvement would accrue to Hoboken from increased taxes that would be imposed on the corporation.

With a shriek that startled those in the courtroom, Mrs. Wilcox Reynolds, of 323 Lemon street, Camden, fell from her chair in a faint when her son pleaded guilty before Recorder Stackhouse to a charge of larceny made by his father. The boy took clothes away from his home and sold them. A brother of the accused youth informed the court that members of the family feared that he would carry out oft-made threats against their lives, and the lad will probably be examined as to his sanity.

After having used his best efforts for seven years for the installation of a beacon light on the point of the beach at Tucker's Beach, Assemblyman Benjamin H. Crosby has the satisfaction of seeing the light in successful operation, and the mariner trading in and out of Little Egg Harbor Inlet will, no doubt, find it of valuable assistance. In recognition of his efforts the Assemblyman was accorded the privilege of lighting the lamp for the first time. The light is a fixed white, on a steel tower twenty-five feet high, and will burn continuously.

Through an opinion filed in Camden Henry Barnes, twelve years old, who has been in the custody of his mother at Atlantic City, must be returned to his father, Marvin D. Barnes, of Scranton, Pa., as the courts of Pennsylvania, at the time Barnes was divorced from his wife, gave the custody of the boy to him. During the vacation days last summer the boy paid a visit to his mother at the shore and as she made an effort to keep possession of him the father brought habeas corpus proceedings in Camden. When the case was heard last week the boy told the court that he desired to remain with his mother.

Plain Field Notes and Queeries

By Druid

O, who wouldn't be a smuggler bold,
A skimming the treasureful sea,
As it boils up jewels and liquid gold,
And fortunes in millineree!

But not for us poor Plainfielders, who are just now harvesting nothing but leaves. Out of the list of odious New York Customs comes an item which simply strikes us speechless—with envy.

"One milliner involved in the pending cases had purchased drafts on Europe for $198,000 in one year. Presumably, most, if not all, this money went for millinery brought into this country. But she imported openly through the Custom House and paid duty on merchandise valued at only $34,000 in that year, leaving a balance of $164,000 which, in the opinion of Mr. Loeb and District Attorney Wise, represents the amounts of her smuggling for that year. The duty on such goods is 60 per cent, so that if she did actually smuggle in $164,000 worth, she defrauded the Government of more than $96,000 in one year." Our manners here are admirable, but quite profitless until we copy some of Gotham's paying customs.

A truly cathedral-like church, high vaulted roof, as simply noble a chancel as Presbyterianity tolerates; pulpit, pews, walls of welcome weather-stained hue, helpful to the meditative mood, and a two-faced organ not so conspicuously throned, idol fashion, as in many churches. A most exquisite exhibit of organ eloquence, not vain-gloriously, but to express and create those emotions which without using words, surpass them in lifting the soul to heights of bliss, at least akin to devotion. All these church privileges offered freely, lovely Sunday evening weather, everything combining to draw the jaded mind from common weekday cares—everything except the main thing—the congregation. A beggarly sprinkling of us, religious tramps, seeking, yes and finding, the high delights that only high music in solemn cathedrals can fully give. True, the begging plate thrust its brazen face in ours, poor sinners though we be, and extorted from timid vanity, a mite which an appeal to voluntary honor would double. Yet let us give the pastor his due, we were asked to give liberally, with the inducements that our harvest will in that case be bounciful and our prosperity return much more than six per cent. on our outlay.

The fine art and science of preaching has certainly seen its best days. We used to glory in at least one day a week of high thinking, and listened to pulpiteering that put poetry into preaching and set us pew folk a-tingling with thoughts and memories that lasted through the week. Now—speaking of churches outside of Plainfield—we are dis-regaled on prose, not necessarily prosy, but need not necessarily be feeble echoes of essays, old lectures, and mere editorials. If empty churches are to be filled again, and real life stirred up once more in church services, the preachers will have to imitate their organ grinders, or even their organ blowers, human or hydraulic. Their sermons need not be so spick and span, so prim, proper, precise, up-to-date and down to the latest thing in philosophic slang. Let them blow a bit; one in New York bellows occasionally in his earnestness and you feel he means it. But there was one, just one, new thing on Sunday night that jarred on old-fashioned nerves. "Abide With Me," was played as a military quick march, and that other exquisite soother, "Peace, Perfect Peace," was so rattled off that it suggested such peace as one feels on coming out of a bad football scrimmage.

* * * *

When speaking last week of the sacrificial fires, Druid fashion, of our autumn leaves, little did we suppose it possible that so shocking an illustration of the danger of these fires in thoroughfares and gardens would so soon startle us. The parents were only following custom in making a bonfire near enough to a big tree to set it a-fire, quite satisfied, as usual, that no accident could possibly occur to them. But suddenly the big tree tumbled over their two young girls, killing one instantly, and the survivor is badly hurt. If human sacrifices are possible, however remotely, because of these Druidical customs, better change our observance of that ancient religious practice.

Last Saturday night across the southwest plains of this inhabited field there came waves and bellowing billows of vocal somethings, first like the agony cries of people at the stake, then it was some torture being inflicted on peaceful citizens by successors of the local Mohawks or whatever tribes first welcomed the Pilgrims to these parts. But it was no worse than a gang of young merrymakers waking the echoes with what they, in their sweet Puritan innocence, mistake for the carols of hilarity. Now that mere noise counts for emphasis, as in the use of a gavel as a substitute for dignity, we have to reckon up the perils of having our ear drums burst before we go to a ball match. Just as we have now to buy the most expensive stop watches to time the artificially faked up applause that greets the belated orator of the evening, who is usually in the trick. This crazy "hollering" is a hollow farce at best, and goes far to account for the lack of filling in some skull caps.

* * * *

The ancient inhabitants of this spacious city must have indulged their mania for speedy locomotion by cultivating the wheelbarrow habit. Their tracks are right under our noses, whether we go east or west, north or south. Look at the irregular but pretty straight cracks right in the middle of the paving stones. Considering that their drink was almost limited to honey water, apple broth, and barley swipes, our sturdy ancestors managed to wheel each other home from the club in fairly straight tracks. Where the cracks wobble, as they do here and there, the probable indication is that the old man was wheeling his goodly helpmate home from a suffrage meeting, and she had to keep turning round to instruct him in the science of navigating a wommaned wheel craft. He retorted that if she considered her tongue was the helm, she had better hold it still, which of course she couldn't or wouldn't. Hence these wriggling cracks.

This postscript Autumn emphasizes Mather Nature's strong weakness for colors. She revels in the gaiety of her apparel and her daughters inherit the characteristic. And their brothers are galloping in rivalry with the girls, as witness their brilliant colored hats, their rainbow vests and sundry other novel femininities of mannish attire. The young dude of the day after tomorrow will sport his grandmother's bonnet, ranther than look too manly. Nature robes herself the year round in her exquisite garment of sober green, and we, her children, contrive to mantle our minds in a tint to match, but sometimes lack the sobriety. Our nursery lore taught us to discern the colors of Mother Nature's messages, is we know the storm's rose and the wind blow. But she keeps her secrets, and she has many, in violet. Such are the meditations as the ghosts of antique Druids nightly pace the pleasant paths of Plainfield.

Tales connected with David Livingston's entrance into darkest Africa and the wonderful work done in Uganda were among the interesting facts with which Miss Denton held the close attention of her audience. The paper was preceded by a devotional service, led by Mrs. A. Chambliss.

A FILIPINO RECEPTION.

When it was felt that the Philippines were sufficiently pacified to warrant the introduction of civil government, President McKinley, in 1900, appointed the Philippine Commission, of which Mr. Taft was the head, says Youth's Companion. His early duties in the islands took him to many of the small, out of the way places that had been in revolt, and where many of his experiences were most amusing. Mrs. Edith Moses relates some of them in her "Unofficial Letters of an Official's Wife." At one place in the province of Panay a public reception was prepared for the commission, with a striking show of loyalty.

The town was small, writes Mrs. Moses, but the people had built four elaborate bamboo arches. One was three stories high, like a tower, with a balcony, from which two little girls, dressed as goddesses of liberty, waved American flags in welcome. Under this arch the president of the town received us, and read a speech of welcome.

There were many amusing mottoes on the arches: "Glory and honor to the Civil Commission." "Hurrah to the Civil Commission, U. S. A." "Many welcomes to the Honorable Civil Commission."

As we passed under the second arch, doves decorated with red, white and blue ribbons were let loose. A band preceded us, and after passing along the roadway for some distance, we found ourselves in a great square, where a goddess of liberty was seen, presumably enlightening the world, with a torch that looked like a big club. She stood on a pedestal, on which were printed, regardless of spelling, the names "Wasington," "Lincon," "McKinly" and "Taff."

The figure was of wood, and we learned that she was a saint brought from an interior town and dressed up in secular garments for the occasion. She wore a purple gown with a deep flounce, and had a crown on her head and an American flag round her waist.

She was an extraordinary creature, but she served as a text for Judge Taft, who, referring to the statue, fondly imagined to be modeled after that of Liberty Enlightening the World, said such a statue was well-timed in its application to this province and these islands; that liberty was a force much misunderstood, but it meant that condition which prevails under a government ordained to secure such liberty to the individual as was consistent with law and order.

Judge Taft's addresses were always admirable, and when they were dressed up in the rolling, sonorous Spanish of the clever secretary, and adorned with the fluorishes so attractive to the native taste, they always made an impression. On more than one occasion I have heard Judge Taft say that when he has made a businesslike statement in his plain Anglo-Saxon style, he leans back to enjoy the mellifluous tones of the secretary translating his plain talk into the oratorical Spanish diction.

UNBELIEVERS MUST BELIEVE

By REV. A. C. DIXON, D. D., Pastor of the Chicago Ave. (Moody's) Church, Chicago.

The Atheistic unbeliever must believe there may be design without a designer, law without intelligent cause. The Bible in calling him a fool draws his picture accurately, for he must violate the laws of his mind in order to say that there is no God. Savages in their rudest state do not say so. They infer a great cause from the great results that they see about them. Their conceptions of God are crude and false, but they are not fools. These sons of nature allow their reason to work, and though their minds are full of superstitious fears caused by ignorance, they see a God behind the material universe as plainly as they see the sun in the heavens. It remains for the modern atheist, be he scientist or philosopher, to turn himself into an intellectual fool by predicating of dead matter only what can be predicated of intelligent mind.

The agnostic unbeliever must believe a theory against facts which have been proved by competent witnesses. His theory is that no one can know God. The facts are that Sir Isaac Newton, the mathematician, said: "I know God." Agassiz, the scientist, said: "I know God." Kepler, the astronomer, after the discovery of his great law, fell upon his knees and exclaimed: "O God, I think thy thoughts after thee." Havelock, the soldier, said: "I know God," and prayed to him daily. Gladstone, the statesman, said: "I know God." Abraham Lincoln, the liberator, said: "I know God," and spent whole nights in prayer to him. Thousands of lawyers, merchants, judges and physicians have declared that they know God. Agnosticism must believe that these competent, trustworthy witnesses are deceivers or deceived.

Agnosticism evidently believes that ignorance has a right to speak and instruct knowledge. When a man confesses that he knows nothing, and can know nothing on any subject, it becomes him to keep quiet on that subject, but agnosticism writes books and magazine articles, parading its ignorance with intellectual pride. It has established a sort of science of ignorance, and formed a blind man's club for the propagation of blindness.

Now, God has given us a text book called the Bible, in which he has revealed himself so clearly that all who will may know him. When the agnostic says: "I don't know," he simply proclaims the fact that he prefers darkness to light; he turns away from the sun that he may grope in the dark cave of his own prejudice and ignorance. If he has looked through his telescope at the stars and through his microscope at the flowers without seeing God, he has simply established the presumption that God will reveal himself in some other way. When he opens the Bible the first words he reads are: "In the beginning God." He ought now to be glad that God has revealed himself in a book, but he is not glad, for his pet theory has been destroyed.

The anti-Bible unbeliever shows a credulity that is truly marvelous. He must admit that the Bible claims to be inspired. "God said," "Thus saith the Lord," rings through its pages. He must admit also that the book was written by bad men or by good men. If good men wrote it, it is, of course, inspired, for good men would not deceive us by making a false claim and they could hardly have been deceived. If the unbeliever asserts that bad men wrote it, then he must believe that the book which has produced the highest civilization on earth, and has developed the noblest characters in the world, was written by liars, who, at the same time, denounced themselves unmercifully for their deception.

But, says the rationalistic unbeliever, God has given to man a reason as guide. Yes, but does reason guide man aright? Look at those monstrous idols in pagan countries. Are they images of the true God to whom men without the Bible have been led by their reason? Are they not, on the other hand, reflections of the depravity of human nature into which man has sunk by the aid of his reason, which fell with his other faculties when he sinned?

The anti-Christ unbeliever who rejects the deity of Jesus must believe, if he accepts the Bible, that he claimed to be divine, for he said: "Before Abraham was I am." "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," and "O Father, glorify thou me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Now, all such unbelievers admit that Jesus was a good man. They praise him for his stainless character. As an unbeliever he must believe, too, that a good man can at the same time be a hypocritical deceiver. Jesus Christ was either what he claimed to be, the Divine Son of God, or he was a wicked deceiver. There is no middle ground. To believe that he was good is to believe that he was God, unless we do violence to our reason by believing the absurd proposition that a good man can make a false claim.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure bad backs;

Cure lame, weak and aching backs;

Cure every form of kidney ills.

Lots of local endorsement to prove this.

Mrs. John Driscoll, 753 West Third street, Plainfield, N. J., says: "The public statement I gave several years ago concerning my experience with Doan's Kidney Pills was correct and still holds good. I suffered from a dull pain across my back which clung to me incessantly. Hard work increased my misery and at times I also had hearaches and dizzy spells. I tried plasters and remedies of various kinds but without relief. Doan's Kidney Pills, which I finally procured at Randolph's Pharmacy relieved me and for that reason I heartily recommend them."

CURRENT VERSE.

It Reaches Cactus Center.

Down here in Davis Center we was gittin' somewhat peeved
As to just which pole explorer was to have his yarn believed;
We had took sides in the matter, and the poker game was shook,
While some rooted hard for Peary and the others yelled for Cook.

Pocos Johnson said, some sneerin', that the common daily feed
Of the most of Cook's supporters was a mess of loco weed,
Whereupon Bear Hawkins answered that it bothered him a heap
When he found that Peary's boosters was jest fit for herdin' sheep.

It was then, or shortly after, that the barkeep ducked his head,
'Cause the atmosphere was vibrant with the song of flyin' lead;
There was sounds of busted glasses, and the door was clean unhinged
When we drifted to the sidewalk, somewhat punctured, brulsed and singed.

Now we're strivin' here in Cactus, fer to keep abreast of things,
But we've drawed one line quite firmly sence we counted up our stings;
And if any north pole hunter comes to lecture, at high cost,
We'll inform him, ere he opens, that he's bound to git a frost.

The Curtain's Fall.

The curtain's falling, and the lights burn low,
So, with God's help, I'm ready now to go.
I've seen life's melodrama, paid the price,
Have known its loves and losses, hopes and fears,
The laughter and the tears,
And now, God knows, I would not see it twice.

I've crossed life's ocean, faced its blinding foam,
But now, heaven whispers I am nearing home.
And though a storm tossed hull I reach the shore,
A thing of tattered sheets and broken spars,
Naked against the stars,
I soon shall be at peace forever more.

For if again I pass these waters through,
I know the kingdom I am sailing to,
What boots it where I lie?—beneath the sod,
Or down the dark impenetrable deep,
Where wayworn seamen sleep?
All gates are good through which we pass to God.

—Blackwood's Magazine.

A Woman's Way.

They walked together, he and she,
Along a brooklet side;
The weather was the balmiest
Of balmy summertide—
A fitting time for him to ask
If she would be his bride.

And she was waiting hopefully,
As she had waited long.
To hear him tell her all about
His love so deep and strong;
But language failed for thoughts that in
His brain would surge and throng.

Silence, 'tis said, surpasseth speech,
Love-meanings to convey—
A truth, maybe, but who is he
Can fathom woman's way?
The little lass she took offense,
At what he didn't say.

—Eugene C. Dolson, in Town and Country.

The Soul's Expression.

With stammering lips and insufficient sound
I strive and struggle to deliver right
That music of my nature day and night
With dream and thought and feeling interwound
And inly answering all the senses round
With octaves of a mystic depth and height,
Which step out grandly to the infinite
From the dark edges of the sensual ground!
This song of soul I struggle to outbear
Through portals of the sense, sublime and whole,
And utter all myself into the air.
But if I did it—as the thunder roll
Breaks its own cloud—my flesh would perish there
Before that dread apocalypse of soul.

—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

The General Tendency.

What's de use o' singin' me
Dat old "git busy" song
When nearly everything I see
Is loiterin' along?
De breeze dat floats de butterfly,
De birds a-singin' strong,
De clouds up yonder in de sky
Is loiterin' along.

De bee picks up a pinch o' sweet,
Den say: "Dar's nuffin' wrong
In callin' dis day's work complete
An' loiterin' along."
De cricket trill his note so high,
De bullfrog soun' de gong,
Des' now an' then—dey don't half try—
Dey's loiterin' along.

Life and Death.

Hope, the great explorer;
Love, whom none can bind;
Youth, that looks before her;
Age, that looks behind;
Joy, with brow like summer's;
Care, with wintry pate,
Masquers are and mummers
At Life's gate.

Power, with narrow forehead;
Wealth, with niggard palm;
Wisdom old, whose hoar head
Vaunts a barren calm,
Haughty overcomers
In their pomp and state,
Masquers all and mummers
At Death's gate.

—William Watson.

The Eternal Feminine.

"Give me a kiss for a guerdon,"
Said the knight to his ladye fair,
"Give me a kiss for a guerdon,
And a tress of thy golden hair.

"For I go to a far off countrie
At the head of my merrie men,
And those that return to those that go forth
Are only as one to ten."

And she gave him a kiss for a guerdon
And a tress of her golden hair,
And sorrowed a while—then married a prince,
In the manner of ladyes fair.

—Walter E. Reid, in New York Sun.

The Little Time.

So little time to love you—
So little time to see
The eyes that have made Heaven
On this poor earth for me!

So little time to listen
Unto that voice which thrills
A soul with sweeter music
Than mocking birds or rills.

But thankful that I met you
In days when Love was new,
And that I can't forget you—
The beautiful and true!

The Battle

Cleveland Moffett

"Well, show me," he challenged. "I am Haggleton!"

Moran's hand dived with lightning quickness into his pocket.

"Father! Look out! Oh!" The warning cries came from Jenny, from Philip, from Margaret, but before Gentle, who stood nearest the half insane man, could grasp him the pistol flashed, was leveled and—

"Philip! My son!" cried Haggleton, for the young man had flung himself before his father and received the bullet in his chest.

"My son!" cried Haggleton again, catching him in his arms and lowering him to the ground. The old diver, Jenny and Margaret crowded around the father on his knees over the prostrate form of his son.

Haggleton looked up at them.

"This is your gratitude," he said pathetically to Gentle. "He risked his life for me!" There was triumph in the voice that addressed Margaret.

"Philip! My son!" cried Haggleton.

And, rising, he exulted:

"I told you that nothing could keep us apart. It is the call of the blood. Now he is mine, mine! I am going to take him home!"

His voice broke as he added:

"My boy! My boy! My little boy!"

He stooped down and kissed the forehead of his unconscious child.

CHAPTER XIX.

MARGARET UNVANQUISHED.

THERE followed weeks of pain and anxiety in the great Haggleton mansion in Fifth avenue. Meantime Philip was passing through a moral as well as a physical crisis. In his weakness and suffering, in the long restless nights when his mind wandered in incoherent mutterings, in his days of increasing strength and courage, in every moment of wakefulness or half wakefulness, there was present before him, vaguely or distinctly, this one thought, that a sudden and tremendous responsibility had been placed upon him. What course should he decide upon? Here were dreams of his eager youth in the way of amazing realization.

And this stern, worldly man, dreaded by thousands, envied by millions—this great lord of taskmasters in whose hands lay all power over toiling multitudes—here he was, this richest man in America, Philip's own father, ready and eager to please him with untold benefactions, to do good instead of evil, to make amends for—for the past, as he had vowed in tender, broken words at that tortured bedside while he waited and hoped and possibly prayed (if Haggleton could pray) that his son's life might be spared him.

He would tear down "lung block," and he would put aside several millions for immediate steps toward solving that problem and several millions more for miscellaneous charities in which his son might be interested. In short, Philip would have at least $10,000,000 at his disposal in a campaign of practical reform. Ten million dollars!

Margaret had nursed him with a sort of passionate intensity.

Philip assumed that the catastrophe had wiped out the past, that the obstacle which had risen between them had been leveled by it. Her evasive answers when he spoke of their coming marriage worried him a little, but her professional assertion that for the present his mind must be set first of all upon his recovery reassured him in a measure.

Her mind was fully made up. No, she could not bring herself to marry the son of a man who had destroyed and in a way disgraced her father.

She loved Philip, loved him in spite of this hateful relationship. She would have married him joyfully as Philip Ames, a man of the people; she would have married him in poverty, in obscurity, in sickness, in anything except his present state.

Her relations with the old millionaire were difficult. He spoke to her as little as possible. Yet it was unavoidable that time and again they should stand side by side watching over the patient when the fever rose and his chances of recovery seemed doubtful.

It was then that they listened together to his delirious mutterings in which his love for her, his admiration and affection for him, his reverence for his mother's memory, his perplexity over the wrong committed, were intermingled.

She began to like Haggleton, to admire the unvarying readiness of resource, the determination and efficiency that always were at his service in the sickroom, as they had been in the marts of men and in Moran's tenement.

Haggleton was fighting his final battle. He had conquered Philip, Gentle, Joe Caffrey, Jenny, Moran even, repentant in his cell awaiting trial. Now he was seeking to conquer Margaret.

Gentle had long since surrendered to the enemy, gone over to his camp, bag and baggage, his almoner already, marveling every day at the way Haggleton had of making every one of his preliminary gifts to the poor yield its hundred per cent of benefit. Jenny had been provided for. Haggleton had seen to this too.

And the bakery trust, forgotten now, flourished. It was selling better bread and cheaper bread to the whole east side. Joe Caffrey had found himself there. He was in temporary charge of the offices in Moran's transformed rooms. "If you want to make a lazy man hustle give him a job bossing somebody else," Haggleton had said laughingly to Gentle.

Thus three weeks passed, weeks of diminishing anxiety. Philip had been declared out of danger and was to make his first appearance at the dinner table that night. Margaret's service as a nurse had come to an end. She must make her final choice.

Haggleton left her alone with him, in his usual mental attitude of preparedness for whatever might happen, hoping that he had won her for Philip and Philip for himself, yet doubtful and ready to do battle to the very last.

Haggleton talked with Gentle in the library. He turned to the large picture of his wife and their infant son over the mantelpiece and looked at it.

"You have recovered your son, Mr. Haggleton," Gentle said, with reassuring conviction. "Philip answered the call of the blood, as you said he would. He loves you."

"Yes, he loves me. That's the great, precious fact—my boy loves me. But he knows this girl, too, and—she won't change. I have watched her all these weeks while she has been nursing Philip. The doctor says that he owes his life to her devotion, but—no, she won't change; she can't forget."

"She can forgive."

"I doubt it, and I don't blame her. I like her. She has narrow ideas, but she holds to them hard! I'd rather have a person strongly wrong than weakly right."

"She will never leave Philip now," persisted Gentle.

"Suppose she makes Philip leave me?"

"It's inconceivable!"

"Nothing is inconceivable, Mr. Gentle, when a good woman thinks that she is fighting a bad man. A conscientious woman has no scruples."

"At any rate, she must speak out soon."

A servant entered.

"There's a person asking to see you, sir," he announced. "He says his name is Joe Caffrey. There is another person with him, a woman."

"It's Jenny," said Gentle in an undertone. "They want to plead for Moran, I guess. His case comes up next week."

"Show them both in."

"How was Moran when you last saw him in the Tombs?" asked the millionaire.

"Sincerely sorry for what he did. When I told him what you have done for Jenny he broke down."

"I'll see that he is dealt with leniently. After all, his mad act was prompted by a father's love, like mine."

The servant opened the door again and admitted Joe Caffrey, followed timidly by Jenny.

CHAPTER XX.

THE BATTLE WON.

JOE was gorgeously attired, according to his own ideas. He wore a brown suit with large and loud checks—green and yellow and red—a blue striped shirt, a green knotted silk tie with a flashing scarfpin and a green tyrolean hat, which for the moment he held respectfully in his hand.

Jenny was neatly dressed in black. Haggleton was again struck by her possibilities, her beauty.

"Gee," exclaimed Joe involuntarily, "this is a swell shop!"

"Good evening, Jenny," said Haggleton kindly. "How are you, Joe?"

"I'm all right, Mr. Jackson—Mr. Haggleton, I mean. Say, Mr. Haggleton, Jenny has something to say to you. It is important. That's why we have come. Soon's she told me I had an intuition."

The millionaire turned to the girl.

"Well, Jenny?"

His voice was very gentle.

"You have been very kind to me, Mr. Haggleton," she began diffidently, "and—and—I would rather tell you alone."

"Come along, Joe," said Gentle.

"You know, Mr. Haggleton," began Jenny, "I told you after my husband was killed he left me with a little baby and no money. So I had to go out as a nurse. Then I sent my child—my beautiful baby girl—to a baby farm, and she died. They always do. I was all alone and so lonely in that beautiful house, and he—Mr. Lawrence"—

"Yes, Jenny. You told me."

"I can prove it all," she announced triumphantly. "I have his letters here."

Haggleton had often thought of this skeleton in the family closet of the unsuspecting Margaret when she had betrayed more plainly than usually her youthful contempt for the weaknesses and stumblings of poor human nature. But of these letters he had known nothing. So there were incriminating documents in the house of Lawrence as well as in that of Haggleton! Well, well!

Jenny held out the letters.

"Do you want them?"

He saw her meaning plainly now.

"Why should I take these letters?" he asked.

"I know more than you think, Mr. Haggleton. I watched that girl, Miss Lawrence. She looks down on you, and—these letters would help."

"She would be unhappy."

"Why shouldn't she be unhappy? She makes others unhappy! I am unhappy."

"Jenny," he continued gravely, "you can't get happiness for yourself by taking it away from somebody else. You don't want to hurt Phil?"

"No, no; indeed not!"

"Then forget all this. Make a clean start."

"Yes, you have given me a chance."

Now her better nature won.

"Yes, I see," she said with frank contrition. "It's wrong. Joe suggested it. I will destroy the letters. No! You destroy them!"

She laid the package on the table before him.

"All right," he said. "I will burn them."

He led her to the door.

"Good night, Jenny, and good luck to you! You will find Joe at the end of the hall and can go out with him."

"If you don't mind, sir," she stammered, "tell Phil that I wish him luck. Good night!"

She was gone.

Haggleton returned to the table, took up the package of letters and looked at it passively. Here was his last trump! He knew it. Haggleton stirred impatiently. Why could not Margaret be a little reasonable? Why did wisdom come so late in life? These letters might prove to her that she had no right to judge and condemn Philip's father. But, then, it would make her unhappy, and should Philip ever know—

Haggleton weighed the package in his hands, pondering. Gradually a light came into his eyes. He had found the way!

Philip should not suffer. It was he, Haggleton, who would renounce.

He had learned to do his loving himself.

He approached the open fire in the huge fireplace, but ere he could thrust into its glow the compromising letters Margaret and Gentle entered. He hastily placed them on the mantelpiece and faced around interrogatively.

Margaret was in street costume.

"Good evening," said Haggleton. "Are you going out, Miss Lawrence?"

"Miss Lawrence is leaving us," said Gentle. His voice was grieved and disapproving.

"You are not going to marry Philip?"

"No. You and he are one flesh, as you said yourself. I have no right to come between you."

"But you love him still?"

"I love him more."

"This will be a great shock to Philip. It may set back his recovery."

The girl saw his intent. Her face grew cold and obstinate.

"He is quite well," she answered in her professional tone, "and—he is a man."

"Listen to me."

Margaret steeled herself.

"There is nothing you can say," she announced. "I cannot change."

Haggleton took up the package of letters.

"No," he said half aloud, as if to himself, "you cannot change."

She loved Philip, oh, yes, she reflected, but she loved her grievance more and most of all her conception of her own superior righteousness.

He stood there near the fire. He looked tired and old, but in his eyes shone a great light.

Margaret was determined to end this painful interview.

"I cannot live under this roof," she announced with an air of finality—"under the same roof with the man who ruined my father."

"It is bad business ruining another person, eh?" asked Haggleton in a curious tone of voice.

He looked again at the bundle in his hands, then turned and threw it into the fire, watching the flames leap up around it.

Margaret watched him anxiously. What were those papers? Why did he destroy them now?

"Well," announced the millionaire, lifting his bowed head and squaring his drooping shoulders, "I will get my son. You renounce him; you do not even offer him his choice. But, as you say, he is a man."

He went to the door. With his hand on the knob he turned and added:

"Whatever happens, I want you to know that I have had more happiness in the last few weeks, since that shot was fired, than in all the rest of my life put together. I have had my son for six weeks!"

He went out, softly closing the door behind him.

The door opened again, and Philip entered, pale, weak, listless, his slow steps supported by his father.

"He knows now that your decision cannot be shaken," said Haggleton to Margaret. "It was best that his father should tell him."

"Margaret!" implored Philip from the chair into which he had sunk, exhausted.

"Philip!"

There was agony in her voice as she sank down on her knees beside him.

"Wait!"

Haggleton spoke again in that curiously level, enigmatic, commanding

"Philip!"

tone of his.

"I am not going to argue or plead," announced the millionaire, "I am going to yield. I have done wrong. I have got to suffer. That's the eternal law! Well, I will suffer."

"No!" cried Philip.

"My son, I have only a few more years before me. You have a lifetime before you—with her. You have the best thing in the world, as I had once, the love of a good woman."

He turned toward the picture of his wife and looked at it, then continued:

"Don't lose that love, my boy, as I did. Don't let anything part you from it, not even your father. You must go with her. It is I who must renounce. And—we can see each other once in awhile."

With a still, trembling little smile he asked of Margaret:

In days so Wide Awake

Is looked at as a Fake.
The Dreamer now is but a Drone

You've got to be Alive.

No Need of It.

"Can't I sell you a painless corn cure, madam?" said the peddler.

"No, you can't!" snapped the woman of the house. "I have no painless corns."

Then the door was shut with a sudden slam.

Down and Out.

"The last time I saw Nervey he was going up to propose to Miss Roxley. He behaved as if he actually had an option on her fortune."

"Oh, all that has been changed! He's got the refusal of it since."

The P. H. S. football team has a game scheduled with the High School of Commerce here on Tuesday, but owing to weather conditions it looks as though it will not be played. This evening a reception and dance will be given to the team at the high school. There will be speech-making and a feed.

BASKETBALL.

The first basketball game of the season at P. H. S. will be played Wednesday, December 1, with Cranford High School. The local team has been practicing a great deal recently and is in fine condition under the coaching of Paul Collier.

Y. M. C. A. BASKETBALL HAS HARD GAME ON

Local basketball fans should see an exciting contest at the Y. M. C. A. when the local five will meet the Elizabeth Y. M. C. A. quintet. The fine showing made by the locals on Thanksgiving against the Millburn A. C. was very gratifying to Manager Listman, who entertains the opinion that Plainfield has the strongest combination that has represented this city since the days of the former Y. M. C. A. champions.

The Elizabeth five is also considered fast. In the games played so far this season the county seaters have given evidence of knowing the game from A to Z. As there is a keen inter-city rivalry in sports between the two associations a sharp battle is anticipated.

BOWLING.

In a postponed series of the individual tourney last night, Frank Blatz, who is makng a bid for second place in the competition won and lost a series.

Blatz lost to Campbell, the latter rolling in a somewhat sensational manner totaling 212 and 245 for the two games.

Blatz lost the first game to Kiely by one pin, but came back strong, rolling scores of 226 and 202, capturing the series.

The scores:

Blatz	203	181
Campbell	212	245
Kiely	160	215	159
Blatz	159	226	202

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS TO HOLD RALLY.

The Christian Endeavorers of this city are urged to attend a combined meeting of the county executive committee and a missionary rally to be held at the Second Presbyterian church, Rahway, on Friday, December 1. Supper will be served at the church between 6 and 6:30 o'clock. Karl Lehman, one of the international field secretaries, will address the missionary rally.

Mr. Lehman will also address a junior rally at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Brief speeches will follow the supper and it is hoped that every society in Plainfield will be represented by delegates.

Mr. Lehman will address the men's meeting at the Elizabeth Y. M. C. A. on Sunday, December 5, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

The program for the evening of December 3 is as follows: Music, introductory address, "Our Hosts," Purdy F. Benedict, president Union county C. E. Union; "Our Guests," Frederick Mintel, 3rd vice president Union county C. E. Union; "A word from the hill section of the county," Ansley Orr, Summit; music; "What our local unions are doing," Clarence B. LaRue, president Plainfield Union, and Harry F. Brown, secretary Union county Union; "Union county and the Fanwood campaign," by William D. Newton, chairman of the Union county Fanwood campaign committee will end the program.

OLD ACCOUNT BOOK REVEALS TRUST PRICES.

Prices on grain products prevailing in this vicinity seventy years ago were revealed by the discovery of an old account book in the old Runyon building at Dunellen a few days ago. Thomas Finneran, who recently purchased the building from Stanley Day, found a number of old relics while rummaging through the attic of the building. Some of the prices chronicled in the account book follows:

1 barrel of flour $9.50; 1 bushel corn, 56 cents; 1/4 cwt. graham flour, $1.18; 8 bushels of bran, $2; 1 bushel oats, 56 cents; 1 cwt. Indian meal, $1.87; 1/2 bushel salt, 31 cents.

Senator Ackerman to Lecture.

An illustrated lecture, "An Attractive Pathway Around the World," will be given in Vincent chapel of the First M. E. church, Monday night at 8 o'clock, by State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman. The lecture will be under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the church.

Clinton Firstbrook, of Grant avenue, has returned from a visit to Dover.

Mr. and Mrs. David P. Stewart, of John street, have been entertaining relatives from Brooklyn.

GOV. FORT'S 81 PLUMS

Fifty-Seven of the Variety for Distribution Must Be Confirmed.

TOTAL SALARIES EQUAL $110,000

What Will He Do For "Davy" Baird —Local Men Whose Terms Will Expire.

Governor Fort will have eighty-one appointments to make during the coming year, the last of his administration. Fifty-seven of these appointments must be made by the Chief Executive with the advice and consent of the Senate, while twenty-four are left to his judgment alone. The amount of salaries for these offices total about $110,000, accurate figures not being obtainable for the reason that several of the officers to be appointed serve on a per diem basis for the time devoted to their duties.

The appointment in which the greatest political interest centres is the place on the State Board of Assessors now occupied by David Baird, of Camden, whose term expired this year. Mr. Baird was slated for reappointment up to two hours before the Legislature adjourned, but when the Camden county Assemblymen voted again the extension of the direct primary system to the election of members of political committees the Governor scratched Baird's name off the list that had been prepared for submission to the Senate, but did not submit a substitute. As a result of this move Baird continues in office as a hold-over.

What the Offices Are.

The salaried offices, besides the State Assessorship, which the Governor will be required to fill with the advice and consent of the Senate, are as follows:

Judge of the Court of Errors and Appeals, W. H. Vredenburgh, Freehold, six years, $20 per diem for time served; Supreme Court Justice, Francis J. Swayze, Newark, five years, $10,000; District Court Judges, T. J. Linlott, Newark, five years, $4,000, and G. W. MacPherson, Trenton, five years, $2,500; County Court Judges, Frederick W. Gnichtel, Mercer; John E. Foster, Monmouth, $5,000, and Louis H. Schenck, Somerset, $3,000—all five years; Prosecutor of Pleas (five years), Ernest Koester, Bergen, $5,000; Samuel Atkinson, Burlington, $2,000; J. Forman Sinnickson, $1,200, and John F. Reger, Somerset, $1,800; Civil Service Commissioner, Charles H. Bateman, Somerville, five years, $2,000; member State Board of Health, John J. Marnell, Hoboken, six years, $1,500; member of the Board for the Equalization of Taxes, Carl Lentz, Newark, five years, $3,500; Commissioner of Department of Labor, Lewis T. Bryant, Atlantic City, three years, $3,500, member State Water Supply Commission, Henry S. Humphreys, Camden, five years, $2,500; members of County Boards of Equalization of Taxes (all three years)—Atlantic, John R. Fleming, $1,200; Bergen, P. G. Zabriskie, $1,600; Burlington, Joseph C. Kingdom, $1,200; Camden, Irving Buckle, $1,600; Cape May, Aaron W. Hand, $1,000; Cumberland, Alexander R. Fithian, $1,200; Essex Lathrop Anderson, $3,500; Gloucester, Andrew H. Nichol, $1,000; Hudson, Joseph J. Guisto, $3,500; Hunterdon, Charles N. Reading, $1,000; Mercer, J. Warren Fleming, $1,600; Middlesex, Frank Crowther, $1,400; Monmouth, William T. Hoffman, $1,400; Morris, Charles A. Baker, $1,200; Ocean, J. Horace Sprague, $1,000; Passaic, George Wurts, $2,000; Salem, D. Harry Smith, $1,000; Somerset, P. V. D. Van Doren, $1,000; Sussex, Henry C. Hunt, $1,000; Union, C. C. Pollard, $1,600; Warren, Jacob C. Stewart, $1,000.

Labor Inspector's Jobs.

Appointment of twelve inspectors of the Department of Labor, at $1,500 each, will be made by the Governor independent of the Senate. The inspectors whose terms expire in 1910 are: Henry Kuehnle, Atlantic City; Heber Wells, Paterson; Joseph Milburn, Trenton; Andrew McCardell, Plainfield; James E. Stanton, Sussex; Mary F. Van Leer, Camden; Mary McKean, Moorestown; Edward McClintock, Newark; William Schlatchter, Orange; Louis Holler, Camden.

The other salaried offices outside of the jurisdiction of the Senate are a member of the State Oyster Commission to succeed Jeremiah N. Ogden, of Bridgeton, $500 per year, and a member of the State Board of Pharmacy to succeed Edward B. Jones, of Mt. Holly, $5 per diem for time served.

The terms of the following members of various State boards who serve without pay will expire, it being necessary for the Senate to confirm their successors: State Board of Education—George A. Frey, Camden; Silas R. Morse, Atlantic City; William R. Barricklo, Jersey City, and William H. Morrow, Belvidere. Public Library Commission—William C. Kimball, Passaic. TRENTON MAN WANTS AUNT'S PROPERTY DIVIDED.

John V. Boyd, of Trenton, has started suit through his attorney, Judge Isaac P. Runyon, of this city, for the partition of four valuable tracts of improved property at Trenton. The property belonged to Mrs. Mary Vreeland, who died intestate last March, and it is valued at about $25,000. There are nineteen defendants in the action, relatives of the dead woman, whose homes are in Middlesex and Somerset counties and some as far West as Chicago.

The suit in the Court of Chancery is for the division of the property among the seven surviving nieces and nephews. The property comprises four business blocks and residential properties.

FASHIONS IN PERFUMES.

In the midst of so many present day fashions, copied from those of 100 years ago, it is scarcely surprising that the habit of using scent in profusion should be numbered, says the London Mail. How they saturated themselves with sweet waters in those old, old days! We read of a very orgy of perfume in the time of Catherine de Medici, and learn that the men then were as prone to its use in profusion as were the women.

One great king perfumed himself with amber from head to foot, and every article of attire was scented. The great Napoleon used floods of eau de cologne every morning, and the Empress Josephine filled her dressing-room with musk in all sorts of forms.

Today it is the scent fountain and the vaporizer that are in great request. With the vaporizer the lady's maid scents her mistress before she leaves her room in the morning and after she has taken the perfumed bath.

The excessive use of sachets attached to the costume is becoming less modish than it was; there must only be an atmosphere, a mere suggestion of scent, instead of a definite aroma about the clothes. In order to perfume them the wardrobe has its long, flat sachet or scented powder to fit each shelf.

When the boots and shoes are put away little sachets are introduced into them; the lace and ribbon drawer has its sachets also, and the only ones that need be worn by day are those sewn into the corset and into the dainty cap of muslin and lace in which the belle takes her early cup of tea or her basin of bread and milk the last thing at night.

When the hair is washed it is pleasant to use a scent that shall help it to perfume the tresses, a permissible way of perfuming the person allowed under the regime of modern taste. The hairdressers of Paris are now using eucalyptus leaves steeped in boiling water for the shampoo used for their customers' hair, and fined that it makes the hair glossy as well as fragrant.

Every day seems to introduce new and coquettish developments of the scent craze. A famous perfumer of lingerie tempts her customers with handkerchiefs, motor veils, shoulder scarfs and lingerie threaded with ribbons the color of the scent that is her customer's choice.

Supposing the favorite violet perfume be associated with the elegante, her lingerie is threaded with violet ribbons, and she wears violet handkerchiefs, violet motor scarfs and other violet fal-lals.

If rose is preferred, it is a rose powder that is supplied, and to carry the idea to its utmost limit all the decorations of the belle's dressing-room will be in shades of pink, while the pretty little lace boxes, gem cabinets and all her toilet table fittings repeat her choice in brocade, crystal and china.

Herw riting table is of course supplied with perfumed leather, and she scents her stationery in order that it may be impressed with her personality as made mainifest by her use of one particular perfume. It is a charming idea in daintiness.

Sold Grocery Stock.

To satisfy a chattel mortgage held by Stephen O. Staats, of this city, the grocery stock of Kirk Wiggin, corner of Somerset street and Lincoln place, was sold at auction this morning by Constable William N. Pangborn. About fifty housewives and husbands attended the sale.

Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Cutter, of Sandford avenue, are guests today of Mr. and Mrs. I. D. McKee, of Mt. Vernon street, near Fairmount Park, Philadelphia.

Chalmers-Detroit "30's" Won Every Event in their Class on Atlanta Speedway

During a week's racing on the new two mile Atlanta Motor Track, the Chalmers Detroit "30's", driven by Matson and Knipper, were never defeated in their class.

Think of going out day after day—the same two stock cars—and winning every race offered—from four to 100 miles.

Here is another remarkable fact: In every race which both "30's" were entered they won second place as well as first. BOTH "30's" defeated every other car of their class. They were always together neck and neck, at the finish.

Neither of them was out of commission at any time. The "30's" also won second place three times racing in the bigger car class—the only three races were entered in this class.

During the whole distance covered in all these races the "30's" averaged 60 miles an hour. A mile a minute for every minute they were running on the track.

There are no other cars in the world at any price with such records for consistency.

Members of the technical committee of the A. A. A. and Editors of the Automobile Trade Journals who keep careful records of automobile contests, both in America and Europe, are authority for the statement that the Chalmers Detroit "30's" hold the world's records for consistent performance.

Their records show that the Chalmers Detroit "30's" has won more events in proportion to the total number entered than any other car in the world.

The Chalmers Detroit "30's" sell for $1,500, and it is thoroughly proven to be the best car in the world for the price.

Our allotment is being sold fast, and we strongly advise you to investigate and place your order early.

SEES CHINA AWAKENING

John R Mott Says That the Celestials are Seizing Their Opportunity.

MAKING GREAT ADVANCEMENT.

In the Christian Religion Will Be Found Their Salvation Says the Lecturer.

"China is awake and is going to school to the world and this is the Christian's opportunity," said John R. Mott, head of the World's Student Missionary movement, in the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church yesterday morning. Mr. Mott was talking to a very large congregation and was earnest to the point of exhortation. He declared that the Chinese as a nation was strong physically and was awakening to the fact that her western friends were quite willing to help her come into her own, a position of prominence among the Powers of the world.

Compared with Russia China showed the greater opportunities for the advancement of the Christian religion. The United States has made a deep impression on the Chinese Empire and it behooves the people of this country to recognize the chance and develop it. Mr. Mott said that of the forty-five countries he has visited in the interests of the Student Missionary movement he was most impressed with the advancement of the work among the Chinese. Their young men are keenly alive to the importance of imbibing the ideas of the countries where the Christian religion is powerful and are anxious to produce like results in their own land.

Ther are 4,000 Protestant missionaries in this great land of the Far East, but they are not the ones which eventually will bring the country into its fullest greatness. It will be the Chinese themselves through the young Chinaman who is obtaining an education abroad. Our missionaries know they are facing a great reality and they realize that they have staked their lives upon their enterprise and they are unanimous in their opinion of the great work. They are all of them of heroic spirit, both the men and the women. But there is one evil which saps the life of the nation which must first be overcome. Fifteen per cent. of the men are addicted to the opium habit. They wear worse shackles than did any slave. Besides they have not the power of resistance which we, under a Christian teaching, possess. None but God's power can reach a situation like this.

"I have studied unprejudiced all the religions of the east, said Mr. Mott, and have attended many religious congresses, yet I must say that the nations under their spell are without hope, absolutely. Confucious says to the drowning man 'Profit by thy experience.' Buddha says 'Struggle.' Mahommed puerily exclaims 'It is the will of God,' but Christ says 'Take my hand'—a direct, personal wish to draw one up to Himself who is able to save.

"Every Chinaman has a right to hear about this superhuman Christ. What right have we to believe that this great people should get along without this Christ? The last decade has shown wonderful triumphs. There are more than one million adherents of the Protestant religion now in China and a great deal larger number of the Roman Catholic faith."

Mr. Mott told of some of the wonderful conversions among the people of Manchuria among whom were some of the worst characters implicated in the Boxer uprising of ten years ago. Whole villages have become converted through the efforts of one reformed and converted boxer. He also told of the conversion of some 150 students who were sent to Tokio, Japan, for their education. These conversions were the result of a four hours' meeting in the Japanese city.

The lines of the opposing religions in China are wavering and if we would follow Napoleon's way of conquering we should exert the greatest strength against those lines now and make the victory complete.

If we can sustain headquarters in the five principle cities of China, Tien Tsin, Shanghai, Pekin, Hangkow and Hong Kong, we can soon make it a simple matter to reach the millions in the country districts. The evangelization of the Empire is purely a Chinese enterprise, to be conducted by their students, the sons and daughters of the poor.

"What an inspiration to the United States it would be if 100 students at Princeton University were to openly declare themselves for the Christian Ministry? Wouldn't everybody in the country think it a great thing? Well, there are things like that happening in China right along

TRINITY'S MISSIONARY HERE NEXT SUNDAY

Dr. Paul Wilburforce Harrison, of Boston, who will visit his parents at Lincoln, Neb., before entering upon his works as a missionary of the Dutch Reformed Church of America, in Arabia, will attend the communion service at Trinity Reformed church next Sunday morning. His purpose is to become a member of the congregation on that occasion, being prompted to take the step because he was recently chosen by Trinity's flock to be their missionary in Arabia. He will bring the customary letter from the Brown Memorial church, Baltimore, Md.

At the evening service, Dr. Harrison will occupy the pulpit and will address the congregation on the Arabian mission field. His term at the Massachusetts Hospital at Boston expires on Wednesday and he will leave for his new field of labor early next year. Trinity has already pledged him the needed financial support for his new work and undoubtedly his presence at the service on Sunday will attract unusually large congregations.

W. C. W. AUFERMAN WON ON RECOUNT OF VOTE

Acting on an order issued by Justice Bergen, of the Suprme court, the Union County Board of Elections held a recount of the vote for town council for the borough of New Providence, at the courthouse in Elizabeth, on Saturday. Judge Whittemore, of Elizabeth, appeared for Lyman B. Coddington, a Republican candidate, who was declared by the district board to have been elected by one majority. Judge Runyon appeared for the petitioner, Walter C. W. Aufermann, the Democratic candidate. After five hours' deliberation, the county board reversed the action of the district board, unanimously holding that Aufermann had won by three majority.

A report to this effect will be made to Justice Bergen, who will issue the certificate of election to Aufermann.

EXPLAINS MISSION WORK

Rev. Dr. Charles L. White Tells of Baptist Home Society's Labor.

FINE RESULTS ARE OBTAINED.

The Organization Has Expended Nearly $400,000 for the Spread of Religion.

Rev. Dr. Charles L. White, associate corresponding secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, occupied the pulpit of the First Baptist church yesterday morning bringing some of the latest news from the home field regarding mission enterprise. He spoke more especially of the work in the south among the colored and mountain whites, and his remarks would indicate much cause for encouragement.

The mission society is an organization of American Baptists, chiefly of the Northern and Western States whose great object is to promote the preaching of the Gospel in North America. There are three main departments of work: Missionary, church edifice and educational. It has been one of the great pioneer missionary agencies throughout the West before the construction of railroads, in giving the Gospel to millions of foreigners, resulting in an in-gathering of about 60,000 in foreign-speaking Baptist churches in the United States.

It has expended about $400,000 for missionary and educational work among the Indians, with remarkable results. It has maintained many efficient Christian schools for the negroes and about 75,000 pupils have been enrolled therein. It has maintained missions in Mexico since 1870 and has erected several houses of worship there. It was quick to occupy Porto Rico and Eastern Cuba early in 1899, where through the labors of its missionaries, 76 Baptist churches have been organized, with 3,767 members; 40 houses of worship and two educational institutions built, and two Baptist papers in Spanish published. Dr. White made an earnest appeal for greater support of this work.

Several years later after the destruction of the plant by fire, arrangements were made to acquire the similar business conducted by Cook Brothers, who were succeeded by Boice, Runyon & Co. The present site is considered one of the most valuable for business purposes in the city.

Rev. J. R. Atkinson, rector of Trinity church, Elizabeth, occupied the pulpit of the Church of the Holy Cross in exchange with Rev. George A. Warner at the evening service yesterday and preached a strong and impressive sermon to a large and appreciative congregation. There was a fine program of Advent music rendered by the choir.

POLICE HUNTING FOR "AUTO DICK TURPIN"

When Borough Marshal Enos Fouratt, of Metuchen, gets through with the highwaymen, who, it is reported, are waylaying automobilists and holding them up at the point of a revolver, there will be a jail full, if all signs do not fail. Recently, it is said, two masked men held up or attempted to hold up J. Chauncey VanHorn, of Trenton, but Mr. Van Horn escaped by speeding up his machine.

Marshal Fourat believes that there is power in numbers and it would be an easy matter to corral the modern Dick Turpin if he could get the necessary machines to patrol the highways used by motorists. So he made known his wants to the owners of cars and stated his intention of beating the highwayman at his own game. The results have not been quite as satisfactory as the Marshal would like because no more attempts have been made to hold anyone up.

Patrol duty has been done by various cars on which the marshal has valiantly taken the seat with the driver, but up to yesterday no further reports of holdups have come to hand. The roads patrolled were Plainfield road, to Fords on the Amboy road; to Stelton on the New Brunswick road and to Menlo Park on the Rahway road.

CRANFORD WOMAN COMMITTED SUICIDE

When told by physicians that there was but little hope for her recovery, Mrs. Lillian E. LaBake, of Cranford, after an illness of two years, determined to end her life. She was found in her room Saturday unconscious. The gas was turned on. From one of the jets was a pipe running to a pillow on her bed. She had himply laid down and inhaled the gas.

Mrs. LaBake was still breathing when found. Dr. Gilton anl Dr. Vail were called, and, after working over her for more than half an hour, failed to revive her. She died in less than an hour after being found. Her husband, who is traveling salesman, returned home yesterday. Every effort was made to keep the news of his wife's death from him, and until late last night he was ignorant of the fact that his wife had died less than ten hours before he arrived home.

The family took every precaution to keep the cause of the woman's death a secret and would probably have succeeded had it not been for domestics telling of it amoing residents in that town. County Physician Wescott was called in, and, after viewing the body, issued the necessary burial permit. Neither of the physicians who attended Mrs. La Blake would make a statement last night.

Mrs. La Bake was 51 years old. She went to Cranford from State Island several years ago. Her home there is in the residential section, in which she frequently entertained, and when it was learned that she had taken her life society folk there were shocked.

Besides her husband, Mrs. La Bake leaves two hildren, Ray and Marie.

ALL SHOULD SHOP EARLY

Rev. Chas. E. Herring Speaks on the Duties of Christmas Buyers.

WHOLESOME ADVICE IS GIVEN.

Patronize the "White List" Stores, Says the First Presbyterian Church Pastor.

Taking for his theme, "Christmas Meditation," Rev. Dr. Charles E. Herring, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, gave a strong talk at his church last night on some of the "Christmas cruelties," which he says are practiced by all classes of people at this season of the year. He spoke in behalf of the overworked saleswomen and children employed as wrappers, express drivers, messenger boys and in fact all who are compelled to work overtime under great pressure and get no extra compensation for the work. In part, Dr. Herring said:

"A Christmas Meditation! No, I am not a little previous with such a meditation, for though Christmas is several weeks off, the preparations have already begun. Part of our Lord's Christmas message reads, 'Good will to men.' I have been contrasting that message with another which I read in a circular addressed to me, asking that I, with other ministers, do what I can to mitigate some of the "Christmas Cruelties,' practiced by all classes of people at this season of the year. What are these Christmas cruelties? Stores open for ten days from 8:30 a. m. to 11 p. m.; saleswomen overworked; employment of thousands of children as wrappers during these hours; irregular meals; no extra compensation; employment of delivery boys often until 1 a. m.; messengers boys and express drivers overworked; homes suffering because of overworked, underpaid saleswomen, wrappers, expressmen, delivery and messenger boys. These are the cruelties of Christmas which can be mitigated if shoppers will be a little more thoughtful and more unselfish and show forth the spirit of the Master, by shopping early—not later than December 19; by shopping early in the day, and by requesting that no packages be sent to them later than 6 p. m.

"This is certainly very simple if we only will do it. If the great majority of people wont do it, there is nothing to prevent our doing it.

"We would show the Christmas spirit if women sought to understand the lives of working girls and their trials, and how with womanly sympathy they could help and not hurt by thoughtless and selfish methods of shopping. It is more consistent with the spirit of Christ, whose birth into the world was to make everybody glad, to know whether certain shops are on the white list than to know whether they give trading stamps. The stores that give short hours and fair wages to their help, merit your patronage rather than the stores where such is not the case.

"The story is told of a minister, who seeing a ragged boy in the street took him home and cared for him. Among other things, he taught him 'The Lord's Prayer.' 'Did you say,' asked the boy, 'Our Father?' 'Yes,' replied the minister. 'Then that means that you and I are brothers,' the boy gleefully responded, and he was correct in his conclusion. It means, God, that the woman who stands in front of the counter is sister to the woman standing behind the counter, therefore, they should think of each other and deal with each other as such.

"John Ruskin said, 'You pray, "Thy kingdom come," but do you want it to come? If you do not want it, you should not pray for it. If you do, you should do more than pray, you should work for it all your life.' Yes, and we should seek to have God's will done on earth as it is done in heaven. A Christian must ever keep before his mind the needs and rights of other men, which by thoughtlessness and selfish indifference he may take away, and take away even during this Christmas season. God help each one of us, that this year we may be better Christians than we were last and that we may be delivered from thoughtlessly occasioning Christmas cruelty."

UNION COUNTY DENTISTS FORM ORGANIZATION

A permanent organization was affected by Union county dentists at Elizabeth Saturday night, when they elected officers and formed an organization which will be known as the Union County Dental Society. This organization is a result of a controversy between the local dentists over the establishment of a free clinic at Elizabeth. The other faction has formed a clinic.

The new county society is composed of those who disagreed with this latter faction and left the meeting several weeks ago. Many of the county dentists have also joined the new organization. A committee was appointed to prepare a constitution and by-laws. Nothing was done regarding the establishment of a clinic. This will be taken up later. Dr. Edward D. Frost, a councilman of Elizabeth, was chosen president of the new society.

The officers of the new society are: President, Dr. Edward D. Frost, Elizabeth; vice-president, Dr. Charles S. Hardy, of Summit; secretary, Dr. J. B. Stevens, of Elizabeth; treasurer, Dr. S. M. Hinman, of Cranford.

COUNTY C. E. PROGRAM FOR RAHWAY MEETING

A brief session of the executive committee will be included in the program, and notices have been sent to all societies by the secretary, Harry F. Brewer.

The meetings give promise of being of exceptional interest, and the county officers are making special effort to secure a large attendance, while Frederick L. Mintel, of Rahway, as president of the entertaining society and also as a vice-president of the county union, is preparing for the pleasure of the young people who will be the guests of the Rahway Endeavorers.

VICTIM OF PTOMAINE POISONING IN HOSPITAL.

Mrs. William Vanderveer, of 116 Watchung avenue, is seriously ill in Muhlenberg Hospital, with an attack of ptomaine poisoning, as a result of eating a fish. Mrs. Vanderveer purchased the fish early last week and soon after eating it became ill.

On Friday her condition became so grave that she was removed to the hospital where it is now said her condition is slightly improved. There is little doubt that Mrs. Vanderveer's illness is due to eating the fish in question as the meat also poisoned a cat which had also eaten a portion of the fish.

INTEMPERANCE GROWING

Father Bogan in Stirring Address Says Evil is on Increase Here.

DEPLORES THE ABUSE OF DRINK

As a Result of Personal Investigation St. Mary's Priest Issues a Warning.

The increase of intemperance among young men of St. Mary's parish and others who do not belong to it furnished material for some stirring remarks by Father Bogan at the five morning services at St. Mary's church yesterday. There was a ring of sincereity in the remarks of the priest as he told his hearers that his sermon was founded on personal investigation.

"I feel that I would not be doing my duty," said Father Bogan, "If I did not call attention to the congregation of the action of fathers, and to not a few of the sons. The disgraceful conduct of a few can bring a blot on the fair name of many who have the same moral object in view—the influence of religion on society.

"The young men who feel that it is manly to join with their fellows in a feature of social life that in its abuse has always brought sorrow and disgrace in its trail should be held before the congregation as pitable rather than as worthy representatives of the manhood of our parish, and while I deeply regret to make this public protest, in asmuch, as it appeals to so few in the parish, I do it to extentuate my personal feelings as well as to emphasize the protest of our parish against the disgrace that a few can bring upon it.

"I have utmost confidence in the appreciation that will be given to my most earnest protest, by you, the fathers and brothers, of the few who have thrown a blot on our escutcheon."

Father Bogan said that from his own observations young men from his own parish and others who were not had become addicted to the immoderate use of liquor and he had seen them with his own eyes staggering along the streets of this city. While he did not mention any names he said he was going to fight the evil to the last ditch and appealed to the members of the various societies connected with his church to use their influence to aid him in the extermination of the evil.

Father Bogan was deeply in earnest in this growing shame. The selling of liquor to minors is an offense for which somebody ought to be punished and as for himself he would fight to the last ditch to bring about some reform. He said that many young men were the cause of wrecking the family happiness and that they were slowly murdering the mothers who love them and whose pillows are wet with tears for their erring sons. The appeal went straight to the hearts of all the parishioners.

We again admonish those who favor Black Furs, that the best time for buying—for Xmas needs—is NOW, while perfect choice and lowest prices are available.

DUNELLEN AND VICINITY.

In view of seeking several needed public improvements Mayor-elect William A. Sanford is trying to cultivate a sentiment among the merchants which will result in the organization of a board of trade. Ten years ago there was such an organization, and although it flourished for a time, the interest among the members died out and the association disbanded. Mayor Sanford entertains the opinion that a live organization of the merchants and business men would be a big benefit to the borough and he is hopeful to unite all interests and form such an organization to work in harmony with the borough government. It has been suggested to Mr. Sanford that a meeting of the merchants be called in a couple of weeks, but it is hardly possible that the ball will be started rolling until after the holidays.

Santa Claus Has Now Taken Charge of Things at Tepper's

All ready here for biggest Holiday trade we have ever had. Santa Claus has made this store his distributing centre for Christmas cheer and gifts and when you come here you will admit that he has been most liberal in his contributions to our great stocks of Toys, Novelties and Gift Things of all kinds.

Yes, this is our Great Christmas Showing—we planned for months to make it so. Every section of the store smacks of Christmas-tide. The joyous Yule-tide spirit prevades the whole atmosphere, and gift things of beauty, of usefulness and of charming originality, for little folks and grown-up people, abound here as never before.

Our Second-floor Toyland is a Treasure House of Dolls and Toys to Delight the Hearts of the Children.

The Toy Store, which is now located in spacious quarters on our Second Floor, has become a wonderland of fascinating playthings. Old Santa Claus has emptied his whole pack of things here, and has brought us more Toys and Games and Puzzles and Dolls than were ever before gathered in this or any other store in Plainfield. How the little boys will revel in this big showing of new Toys—and the little girls will go into ecstacies over our great Doll family. Bring them frequently and let them enjoy this great collection of "stocking fillers."

Everything in Our Holiday Stock is Brand New

We closed out all our old stocks immediately after last Christmas, and you'll find nothing in this great showing which is not fresh and new.

But great variety and newness are not the only attractions of these Christmas stocks. We make the happy holiday time still happier by keeping prices down to the lowest possible point. Your gift money will go farther here than at any other store in town.

Inspect our fine displays and remember the advantages of early shopping. Begin now while you can take your time and choose from full stocks.

HAHNE & CO.

The spirit of Christmastide, that is felt 'round the civilized world, pervades every nook and corner of this great establishment. The beautiful decorations, the dazzling lights, the gorgeous displays of gift things from everywhere—all tell of the coming celebration that, for a time, mellows the hearts of the most callous and brings us to a realization of the oneness of all mankind.

Santa Claus, the patron saint of the children, comes again on his annual visit to the State's greatest store, and here he will make his headquarters, greeting the thousands of little visitors with his merry smile and twinkling eyes—with a little present for every child—spreading good cheer and gladness as only this jolly old elf can.

FIFTY-SECOND

Annual Holiday Exposition

The Witchery of Wonderland Is O'er the Store.

Millions of Gifts for Old and Young ---Every Gift a Useful One.

The surprises and delights that came to Alice in Wonderland will find their counterpart when the Alices of real life come to this real Wonderland, the gates to which we open wide tomorrow.

It will be as tho the fairies had taken possession when we closed the doors Saturday night and transformed this mammoth bazar into a palace of playthings, a treasure house in which was stored the world's most beautiful objects of art, a mine of gold and jewels, a garden filled with marvelous colors. Yet it is all real—all thought out and planned by human minds and executed by human hands—planned for your pleasure.

There is a certain joy in storekeeping—a deal of pleasure experienced in hunting for and selecting such things as we feel will most delight those who are to receive remembrances on Christmas morning, be they things useful, wearable, or simply ornamental.

To stock a store for the holidays is a delight to all concerned—the gathering of the goods, the unpacking of them, the displaying of them, and the selling of them. It means hard work and lots of it for all of us, but there are rewards aplenty all around, especially if you, our friends, show rightful appreciation of the many rare and beautiful things we have assembled for you in this establishment.

That our 52d Annual Holiday Exposition exceeds in magnitude, beauty and variety any we have ever made will be conceded by all who have made annual pilgrimages to the big store. This is in keeping with the spirit of progress that has ever animated this business. We grow by doing. And, having gathered our holiday stocks with skill and foresight in past years, it follows that this year we gathered more wisely and to your greater pleasure and profit.

Many thousands will journey hither from all sections of the State in quest of gift things. More people will visit this store than visits such expositions as those at Jamestown and Seattle—twenty, thirty, fifty thousand a day will come to see the holiday show.

And unlike the average exposition there will be no importuning you to buy. You can come and go when and where you please and as often as you like—and it is all free!

The glittering lights and grand displays are not made to dazzle and bewilder you, nor to entice you, but simply to delight you and make it easy for you to find the gifts you seek.

Toyland Full of Surprises

Bring the Little Ones to See Santa Claus

Every tot that comes to Toyland will be made glad for there are many playthings here that will make them stare in wonderment. Fully a hundred thousand children will visit Toyland, for here, as they know, is the only real Santa Claus—here they will be greeted by the jolly old fellow himself—here he will give them a little present—and here he will receive and answer all their Christmas letters telling what they want in their Christmas stockings.

Such a show of playthings has never been made by any store you know of. It's simply great! So many things that go! So many dolls! So many Teddy Bears, Billy 'Possums and other animals! Oh, the kiddies will enjoy the show, but not much more so than will the parents who come with them.

See the Giant Santa Claus in Our Grand Court

My, what a big fellow he is! Boots as high as a tall man! Arms 8 feet long! a head that several boys and girls could play house in! And he nods his head to you!

REGULAR ARMY METHODS SOON TO BE ADOPTED

Recent unofficial conferences of field and general officers of the National Guard have resulted in a program that will mean, with legislative aid, the practical rejuvenation of the organization in this State through closer adherence to the regular army standard. Higher physical tests for the men, better drill service, the recruiting of companies up to war strength and the placing of the artillery on a practical service footing are benefits contemplated.

The fighting strength of the companies is eighty-one men in war time, and there are twelve companies in a regiment. There are few companies with more than sixty men on the rolls, and five per cent. of these, it is said, would be found unfit for active duty.

In the future it is planned to have the surgeons of the regiments more careful in the examination of recruits and the examination, with certain exceptions, equivalent to the regular army test. The guard now is recognized as in advance of that in many other States and equal to that of any, but as a trained fighting machine it fall short of being able to go into the field ready for hard campaigning.

The general officers with the commandants of the five regiments were of the opinion at the recent consultations that while the companies should be up to war strength when possible, it was better to have a company of forty hardy men than one of eighty with half of them not fit. The officers also believe more outdoor work necessary for the troops. They also favor calisthenics to aid physical development.

Men now report at armories on drill night, shoulder their guns, drill, replace the guns and go home for a week before going through the same thing. In no regiment do the officers teach the use of the bayonet in attack or repulse. The United States regulation on this point is in itself a good physical exercise.

While some men in each regiment are good riflemen, the majority, it is declared, are not expert, and even after they begin to "find the bull's-eye," they do not learn the mechanism of the piece, its range, or how to arrange the sights and win gauge in actual field shooting.

The practice march with full equipment, as specified by the Government, has been considered by the officers and practically approved. The general belief is that under officers who "know how to hold the men," the marches will be of great benefit. Some of the general officers advocated forced marches in the early summer, on the principle that only the fittest would survive and weaklings be forced out, and that with the picked men a better service would be built up.

Another thing that will be insisted on is "military courtesy." Visitors at armories, especially regular army men, have been surprised to see men after drill slough about and fail often to salute officers. The principle that a "soldier is always a soldier" will be impressed on the men.

LEGAL POINT PUZZLES COURT.

Hackensack, Nov. 29.—District Court Judge Cornelius Doremus reserved his decision in a novel case late Saturday. The point in question was whether or not a summons served upon any station agent of a foreign corporation was a legal service. The case in point was that of Charles Friend, of Montvale, who brought suit to recover $100 damage for a carload of vegetables which he claimed had been ruined because of delayed shipment.

The representative of Collins & Corbin, of Jersey City, who appeared in the interest of the Erie Railroad, requested that the case be set aside, in view of the fact that there was no legal summons. It developed that the station agent at Montvale had been served with the legal document, instead of the authorized agent at Jersey City. Judge Doremus reserved his decision on the ground that he wished to investigate as to whether the Bergen District Court had any rights in Hudson County. According to the court this is the first case of its kind in New Jersey. The laws of 1908 provide that a foreign corporation must name some person upon whom service shall be honored, whether or not this applies to the district courts.

MONTENEGRO NATIONAL DANCE.

The national dance of Montenegro is the "Kolo," somewhat similar to the "Hero" of Bulgaria. Both sexes take part, crossing hands and forming an unjoined circle, states a writer in The Wide World Magazine. The music they supply themselves, each end of the horn alternately singing a verse in honor of the prince and his warlike deeds.

The "Kolo" is always danced at any great national festival, and the effect of the sonorous voices and swaying ring is very fine. Then there is another dance performed by four or five, usually youths, to the accompaniment of a fiddle, the leader setting a lot of intricate quicksteps which the rest imitate at once. It is really a sort of jig and makes the spectator's head swim if he watches it for long.

I never saw any dances in northern Albania, though certain Slav artists love to depict wonderful sword dances, with beauteous maidens swaying gracefully after the style of nautch girls.

A casual observer, who has seen the Albanians come into Montenegrin markets or to their great weekly gathering in the bazar of Scutari, could never picture these stern, lean men dancing or at play. They never smile, and they look the life they lead, each clan ever ready for war with its neghbor and absolutely pitiless in the vendetta. The Red Indian is not more stoical in his bearing than the northern Albanian clansman.

SHOEMAKING BY MACHINERY.

How long would it take you to make a pair of boots, do you think? You probably better not begin it, especially if you need them soon, says the Chicago News. Even a cobbler in the old days, working with his assistant, would spend a day and a half making a pair of boots. And the cost would be about $4. But now, of course, shoes are made by machinery, and it is astonishing to hear how quick they are made. It takes just four minutes to make a pair of boots! And the labor cost is about thirty-five cents.

Of course, no one makes the whole boot nowadays. There are a hundred different men making different parts of it, and each one does the same thing over and over again, and each man learns to do this particular work especially well and quickly.

And you should see the buttons sewed on! A boy takes the part of the shoe where the buttons are to go and fits it into a machine, throws in a handful of buttons quite carelessly, turns the machine, and in no time out comes the piece of leather with all the buttons exactly in the right place. No wonder some factories turn out ten thousand pairs of shoes in a day!

AS PAT INTERPRETED ORDERS.

Did I ever tell you the major's curious adventure last winter? No? Well, says the London Telegraph, the major came into the Rumfoozlers one night with three pieces of court plaster on his nose and an eye in half-mourning, and was vainly importuned to divulge its origin.

He declined all confidences, but The Yapper, to whom, in a weak moment, he had related the circumstances under which he had received his scars, told us all about it after the major's departure.

It appears that he was staying at a hotel, where a brawny farmer's son had been engaged, with no experience in hotel work, but with a frame capable of caring for his master's property during the small hours, and with a profound sense of duty as well.

The weather was cold, and the major asked the landlord to have a fire made in his room at 6:30 the next morning. As is customary, a slate was hung in the hallway containing directions for the night porter regarding the time guests were to be called to catch early trains, etc., so the landlord wrote upon the slate: "Fire 40 at 6:30."

Next morning the major was awakened by a loud knock at his door. He shouted "Come in," for it was 6:30, and the porter entered.

"You're to get out," he said briefly.

"What do you mean?" asked the major, testily.

"I'll show you fwhat I mane," remarked Pat, "if you don't git mighty quick. I've orders to fire you out at 6:30, and out ye go."

"What kind of a fool are you, anyway?" shouted the major, sitting up in bed.

"I am all kinds," responded the porter, "but I obey orders just the same, and out you go."

Suiting the action to his words, he grabbed the major by the neck and hauled him out into the middle of the room.

"Now driss yourself, ye blackguard," said Pat, "and driss quick, or Oi'll throw you out as ye are."

The major began to storm, and used language not to be repeated, whereupon the exasperated and honest porter sprang upon his victim, and shot him into the hall like a bundle of rags. The major's clothes, traveling bags, rugs, etc., followed.

"Now," said Pat, "driss within foive minutes or out ye go in the strate as ye were born!" And out the major would have gone, but the landlord, disturbed by the noise, came out and rescued him from his formidable persecutor.

WINTER SPORTS IN CALIFORNIA

One cannot be long in California without appreciating the fact that the magnet which attracts the throngs is the possibility of life in the open, winter and summer, its many pastimes and sports, says Outing. It is accentuated in every part of the State, even on the islands of the coast, which are famed for their sports, cool summers and warm winters. They are the Coronados off San Diego, the Santa Catalina islands, in the channel of that name, including San Clemente, twenty miles long, forty miles off shore; Santa Catalina, twenty-two miles long, eighteen from the mainland, and San Nicolas, ninety miles from the latter.

Off the Santa Barbara Channel there is another group of islands ranging from seven to twenty miles in length—Santa Cruz, Santa Rosa, San Miguel and Anacapa. Nearly all these islands have marked individuality in climate. Santa Catalina is visited by 150,000 persons annually, and has a summer contingent of 7,000. The attractions are the outdoor life, sea angling, camping, riding over a thirty-mile mountain road with grade of five to ten per cent., ideal camps in scores of canyons, and wild goat hunting.

At Santa Catalina and San Clemente there is sea angling that for variety of game, and size, has attracted the anglers of the world. Here the leaping tuna is found in vast schools; here the long-finned tuna is so voracious that it has been hooked with a bait on a gaff, and at all of these islands there is a wealth of animal life exceeding that of the Mediterranean, that is a constant delight to the student or idler who may drift over the smooth water far out to sea, or watch the fishes in the submarine forests or kelp through the glass bottom boats, a fleet of which is found here.

FAIR'S FIRST NIGHT NETS NEARLY $1,000

St. Mary's assembly hall was a scene of bustle and merriment on Saturday night when the societies of the parish successfully inaugurated the fair and bazar which will run all this week. Success to the venture was assured by the large attendance and the liberality in which the various booths were patronized. A tremendous business was done and it is estimated that the profits for the first night was close to the $1,000 mark, which swells the new convent fund to about $6,000.

The interior of the hall was profusely decorated with the national colors and bunting and the installation of hundreds of electric bulbs, which furnished the light, added to the attractiveness of the decorative scheme.

The three main booths did a rush business from the start to finish. A spirit of rivalry exists between the different societies and their representatives who are always on the hustle for business. The Knights of Columbus and Children of Mary's booth was in charge of Timothy J. Meany and John Curain who were also assisted by wives and friends of the members. In the A. O. H. and Ladies' Auxiliary department Miss McCue and John Gallagher directed matters, while Mrs. Mary A. Smith and Michael D. O'Keefe was in charge of the Young Ladies' Sodality and T. A. B. Society booth. Miss Elsie Knowlton presided at an orange tree and Miss Gilligan dispensed hot popcorn.

Dancing is the popular pastime, music for which is furnished by Al Squier's orchestra. Tonight a special program will be one of the features.

Tomorrow and Friday afternoons have been set apart for the children of the parish. Father Bogan has arranged special features for their amusement in the way of magic exhibitions and Punch and Judy exhibitions.

NOT MUCH DANGER OF BREAK IN THE STATE.

With the caucus of the Republicans called for December 14, there is little or nothing to result from the usual Tuesday confab of the legislators at Trenton this week. There is some talk of breaking the slate of Ward, of Bergen, for speaker, and Edge, of Atlantic, for majority leader of the House, but it is hardly likely to develop into anything serious.

Such slates have been broken but once in almost thirty years. Certainly with the hold the State leaders have of the Legislature this time it is unlikely that the slate will be upset.

Although Governor Fort every Tuesday tells the newspaper men that there is still a chance for a special session, it is unlikely that such a session will be called, as the vexed question of preserving the potable waters of this State for consumption by its municipalities is well in hand in the courts. The Governor goes away hunting next Saturday and will not return until December 11.

FUGITIVE CASHIER AT WORK AS FARMHAND.

Camden, Nov. 29.—Through the alertness of Detective John Smith the arrest of Daniel Matley, who is wanted in Kings Tree, S. C., for the embezzlement of $10,000 was effected at Woodstown Saturday morning. Matley was found working on a farm as a helper. He surrendered without any resistance. Matley is charged by the Lake City Trust Co. with stealing $10,000 while he was assistant cashier. Matley told the detective he had spent the money in a trip around the world.

Smith was in an employment agency in this city Saturday when he learned that a man named Markley had been given work in Woodstown. He thought of the description sent out for the arrest of Matley and decided to see if the two names did not refer to the fugitive cashier. His search proved his suspicion was correct.

TAFT JOINS FIGHT FOR UNIFORM DIVORCE LAW.

New York, Nov. 29.—Uniformity in the divorce laws of the various States is being sought by President Taft and most of the State Governors, according to Seth Low, who as president of the National Civic Federation has just announced the date of the conference on uniform legislation. This conference will be held in Washington on January 17, 18 and 19.

Representative men of every State in the Union, appointed by the Governors, will attend.

Attorney-General to Address Elks.

Long Branch, Nov. 29.—The Memorial Day committee of Long Branch Lodge of Elks Saturday announced the speakers for the annual lodge of sorrow to be held Sunday evening, December 5. They are Attorney-General Edmund Wilson, of Red Bank, and Samuel I. Macdonald, a lawyer, of Newark. A quartet, orchestra and soloist will also take part in the program. The committee in charge comprises Dr. J. T. Welch, Dr. Edwin T. Field, Nathan Wood, R. C. Adamson, Jr., and E. F. Ford.

CONGREGATION HEARS "THE TWO HARVESTS"

The quartet and chorus choir of the First Baptist church gave a Thanksgiving musical service last night, which included the rendition of the beautiful cantata, "The Two Harvests," by the celebrated English composer, Dr. Ferris Tozer, whose degree os a doctor of music was conferred on him by Oxford University. There was an unusually large congretion present to enjoy the service.

The program opened with a prelude, "Aria," Goldmark, by Miss Florence Wohlfert, violinist, and Howard Case at the organ. Throughout the rendition of the cantata, the congregation sang several hymns. The arrangement of the cantata is pleasing. It consists of several solo numbers, these being taken by Miss Louella C. Harris, soprano; Miss Josephine Bracker, contralto; William Holmes, bass, and George Smith, tenor.

The first part of the cantata was devoted to the material harvest, and in this Mr. Holmes and Mr. Smith had most of the work. The parts for soprano, contralto, tenor and bass were well divided in the second part, which was devoted to the Spiritual harvest. The soloists sang in a pleasing manner, while the work of the chorus was up to its usual high standard. In the concluding part of the cantata there was an effective part for male voices and also a part for the entire quartet which was delightfully rendered. All together the service was one of the most pleasing and satisfactory heard in a long time.

At the close of the cantata Rev. Dr. J. A. Chambliss, the pastor, preached a short sermon, appropriate to the occasion, in which he drew many helpful lessons from the theme of "The Two Harvests." As an offertory, an anthem by West was sung by the choir. The postlude was "Hosanna,' by Wachs.

TAX TOO HIGH, C. R. R. THINKS.

A representative of the New Jersey Central Railroad is looking up valuations and assessments on abutting local railroad property, and from what can be learned, one of the important appeals to be made to the Union County Board for the Equalization of Taxes will be that of the New Jersey Central for a reduction on the assessment placed upon its East Broad street property.

Last year the railroad company appealed from the assessment on the same property and a reduction upon certain portions of the land was granted.

This year the assessment has been increased again, and the railroad company will again seek reduction. The representative of the company has been busily engaged collecting data in the county tax office and in the tax office at the City Hall. He has been going over maps and records, and is preparing the material for the counsel of the company to make a determined fight for a reduction.

From the amount of work put in, it would seem that the company may also appeal from the assessments on some of its other local property. The East Broad street plot extends from the arch to Magnolia avenue.

Breintall Dinner February 7.

Trenton, Nov. 29.—Richard Blossom Farley, the portrait painter, and son of Professor Dickinson Farley, of the State Schools, reported to a special committee of the National Guard officers Saturday that the portrait of former Adjutant-General R. Heber Breintnall, which is to be presented to the general by the officers, is finished. The committee settled upon the first Tuesday in February as the date of the dinner at which the painting is to be given. This dinner will be a farewell tribute to General Breintnall. General Murray is the chairman of the committee of officers in charge of the same.

McCarter to Help Republicans.

Trenton, Nov. 29.—Former Attorney-General Robert H. McCarter has been retained by the Republican organization to act as its chief counsel in the recount of the Fourth and Eighth ward votes, which was begun today. With Mr. McCarter will be associated City Solicitor Charles E. Bird and George W. Macpherson, judge of the City District Court. The Democrats will re represented by Counselors John H. Backes, Martin P. Devlin and Erwin E. Marshall. The Democrats, in the face of the returns, won by three votes in the Eighth Ward and fine in the Fourth.

"CIRCLES ON THE SQUARE" MOVEMENT SPREADING

There was a large and enthusiastic meeting of voters of Passaic township, Morris county, Saturday night, at Maennenchor Hall, Stirling, when steps were taken to organize a Circles on the Square, similar to the organizations in New Providence and Warren townships. There were about one hundred of the 700 voters of the township present.

William Jeffery, originator of Circles on the Square, addressed the audience on the origin of the Circles and what has been accomplished in New Providence and Warren townships. Mr. Jeffery is president of the New Providence Circles.

William H. Rogers, president of the Warren Circles, presided and made a short address. The audience elected seven men of their number to serve as a committee on organization of a civic body for the Passaic township.

It is probable that it will be known as Passaic Township Society Circles on the Square. The following men were selected as a committee:

Henry Hart, Walter Swenson, G. M. Cornish, township clerk, William Seitzman, Otto Heintzman, Republicans; Thomas Melee, Charles Kutcher, Raymond A. Alland, Democrats. The committee met at the close of the meeting and organization will be effected at a meeting to be held Saturday night at the same place.

GIRL GIPSY STOLE IS BROUGHT HOME.

Arrayed in finery Amelia Johnson, the thirteen-year-old gipsy girl returned Saturday evening to Elizabeth accompanied by her father and uncle, Ephraim and Lewis Johnson. There were rousing cheers given as her mother's arms locked in embrace about her in the gipsy camp in Atlantic League Park.

"I'm glad to be here," said Amelia. "Me no like Chicago any more. I like Elizabeth. Me no like Demetro. I no marry Ephraim Demetro. He a bad one."

Then she told her experiences since the Demetros took her three years ago. She had pursued fortune telling and had been well treated. The elder Demetro, known as "Tom Mitchel, the gipsy king," expected her to become the wife of his son. She also told of her rescue.

BURGLAR FELLED IN FIGHT.

Police Think They Have Man Who Robbed Places.

Stewart Moore, believed to be a daring burglar and responsible for various robberies at Elizabeth, is in the custody of the police, having been arrested yesterday after a desperate struggle by Detective Sergeant Michael Mulcahey and Policeman Johnkins, of that city. He was found, the police say, pilfering the saloon of Meyerholz & Patterson, 117 Front street, Elizabeth. Before his arrest was effected the man was knocked senseless by the police.

Meyerholz appeared before Judge O. P. Mahon in the police court yesterday as the complainant against him, but Chief Tenney decided to put off the hearing, pending a further investigation. There have been several daring robberies in the city of late.

Much damage was done to the residence of Rev. J. I. Mombert, the retired Episcopal clergyman, at Fifteenth avenue and East Twenty-third street, Paterson, early Friday evening by a fire which is said to have originated in a defective flue in the basement and made its way to the second floor.

For faking the police by stating that she had swallowed laudanum, Mrs. Maud Knockton, of 1019 Segal street, was given twenty days in jail in the Camden police court Friday. The Physicians' Hospital of Vineland has been informed by Trenton experts that an analysis of the dog's head recently sent from Vineland, shows that the animal had the rabies. Committed to jail on a charge of breach of promise, John Ruthinski, of Third street and Atlantic avenue, was robbed of $6 in the Camden county prison Friday, and when Thomas Herter was accused of the crime he made a confession implicating other prisoners, one of whom was Walter Roberts. Rolland Abel, a Millville telegraph operator, fell down a flight of icy steps and was severely hurt.

PEARY WILL BE GUEST AT TRENTON BANQUET.

Trenton, Nov. 29.—Commander Robert E. Peary, who is at his winter home in Washington, D. C., has accepted an invitation to be present as the guest of honor at the annual dinner of the Chamber of Commerce here. No date for the dinner has been fixed, as it will be left to suit the convenience of the explorer.

Commander Peary's promise to come here was made after the invitation had been extended to him by Secretary Metzger, of the Trenton Chamber of Commerce, who stopped off here for the purpose while returning from the Deeper Waterways convention in Norfolk, Va. The secretary carried a letter of introduction from Congressman Ira W. Wood, of the Fourth New Jersey Congressional District, whose home is here.

The official invitation was from H. G. Stoddard, vice-president of the trades body, who is chairman of the committee arranging the dinner. Details for the dinner will be announced in a few days.

CURIOUS SCHEMES OF INVENTORS.

Sir C. N. Dalton, who has just retired from the comptrollership of the British Patent Office, during his eleven years of office has had to brave the importunities of hosts of freak inventors, but on giving up the reins he has the satisfaction of knowing that the crank is becoming a negligible quantity, while the man of sterling worth has found, by recent enactment, a greater scope for the exercise, of his inventive faculties, says the London Observer.

The cynic, whose hopes as a patentee have been blighted, has solaced himself with the reflection that "the world is divided into two sections—those who can invent and don't and those who can't and do." There is more than a suggestion of truth in the retort, for the Patent Office is still made the repository for eccentric originality emanating from the over-wrought brains of crazy inventors. The genius with a masterly conception of how to solve the problem of perpetual motion is as cheerfully optimistic and plentiful today as he was half a century ago. The continuation of this species is perhaps the nearest approach to perpetuity the human race has evolved.

He is by no means alone, however, in his insatiable desire to add to the sum total of the world's great discoveries. Almost from the moment when James I., in return for "personal consideration," instituted the patent laws, the system became a sort of flare to which madmen were attracted with mothlike infatuation. The office had only been established a few days when an intrepid agriculturist came forward with a claim that he had unearthed the secret of how to plow land without horses or oxen and had found how to endow barren land with stupendous fertility. His imagination was excellent; where he failed was in the fact that he had not the crudest notion of how to accomplish his dual purpose. If he had lived long enough he might have been comforted by the knowledge that he had soared to dizzy heights in distinguished company.

Among the curiosities to which the present generation has given birth is a specification for combining animal instinct with human precision in the realm of sports. The patentee elaborated a plan whereby "direct communication, by chain, cord or other device, should be established between the tail of a pointer and the trigger of the sportsman's gun." By intuition the dog would know when the bird was about to rise, and by moving his tail would fire the gun. The sportsman had only to see that his aim was accurate. The dog and the bird would do the rest. The brilliancy of the notion had not yet been able to penetrate the apathetic density of the general body of sportsmen, and so another addition has been made to the already long list of disappointed inventors.

A burst of inspiration induced a London hostler to patent a "one-tailed shirt," while a tailor, who possessed more originality than was good for him, lodged a specification for protecting trousers from mud spots by wearing splashboards on the heels of the boots. A seafarer, knowing the indescribable agonies of acute sea sickness, concocted a fearful and wonderful scheme whereby a ship might be provided with a special platform suported by balloons, this dispensing with those vagaries of motion so distressing to the fickle constitution.

A rural gentleman of marked economical habits, having observed the gorgeous reflection of the setting sun in the village windows, saw no reason why every hamlet should not boast of its own artificial moon. By the expenditure of much mathematical skill he demonstrated that by suspending a huge reflector from a balloon at high altitude it was possible to reflect the rays of the sun after daylight had died away.

This is the Square Pot of the BOYNTON FURNACE that saves fuel and dollars and will heat the whole of a house. In every great engine and under every big boiler you'll find a square fire box. Ever noticed it? Well—we have adapted that principle to our furnaces. A square pot gives a clean, hot, clinkerless fire without waste of fuel. It requires the least attention and responds instantly. BOYNTON furnaces only have square fire-pots. It is our patent. There are other improvements. A square ash pit that improves the draft and makes removal of ashes easier. A pure air supply—for health's sake. A dust flue that saves the rooms above.

Look up the BOYNTON dealer in your town and talk it over.

There are BOYNTON heating plants of all kinds. Ask about our Round or Sectional Boilers for Steam or Hot Water. Also Ranges.

The Battle

By

CLEVELAND MOFFETT

Novelized by the Author From His Great Play of the Same Name

Copyright, 1909, by G. W. Dillingham Co.

"It won't hurt him to see his father once in awhile, will it?"

Margaret rose to her feet precipitately. Her pride was broken, her enmity dissipated. A realization of the grandeur of this sacrifice, so simply proffered, overwhelmed her and filled her heart with humility and contrition and love and the impulse of atonement.

"I can't do it!" she cried. "I am not going! I love you too!"

The three were in one another's arms. Gentle turned away deeply moved.

"My daughter! My son!"

Haggleton's voice trembled.

"I will devote the rest of my life to business—don't look astonished—the business of making you happy. And we will make the poor happy, too, if that will make you happier. See here; I am going to put $10,000,000 aside for you three—for my son, my daughter and our good friend Gentle. You shall be custodians."

A twinkle came into his eyes as he asked:

"Now, what scheme would you three students of poverty propose to utilize $10,000,000 in helping the poor of this city without demoralizing them? It's up to you."

"Ten million dollars!" speculated Gentle. "We could cover this island with model tenements."

"Cover the island!" cried Philip. "We could build about fifty! And they would never pay. We would waste our millions."

Haggleton was watching them, the twinkle still in his eyes. Something he had anticipated was amusing him.

"Well, then, what would you suggest?" Gentle was asking of Philip, with just a little heat in the tone of his voice.

"I'd suggest homes for consumptives!" The answer came with unhesitating promptness. "That's what the city needs."

"I don't agree with you," Margaret now broke in firmly. "We do not want homes for consumptives. We must build homes to prevent consumption. We must think of the next generation. We must help the poor children; we must give them sunshine, green fields?—

"Impossible!" Philip pointed out. "You can't take them away from their parents."

"Let the parents go too!"

"No, no; the parents have to work!" and "No, no; that would pauperize them!" cried Philip and Gentle at the same time.

"I never thought of that!" confessed the girl in bewilderment.

Haggleton was smiling broadly.

"Well, what is it to be?" he asked. "You three have been studying the problem for years, you now have all the money you want, and the first thing you do is to condemn each other's plans!"

And here he received the greatest tribute that had ever been paid him in his wonderful career. These three reformers, so sure of themselves, turned to him with implicit reliance upon his talent for organization, his genius for leadership and without a doubt of his ability to solve their problem for them asked, as if with one voice:

"What would you do?"

The millionaire went to the library table, unlocked one of its drawers, took from it a bundle of blue prints and typewritten papers and spread them out before them.

"It is the easiest way in the world," he began deliberately. "There's only one sound, practical, common sense way to help the poor of New York city with $10,000,000 without demoralizing them, and this is the way"—

* * * * * * *

They were seated at the table now, Margaret between Philip and his father, her head leaning against the shoulder of the one, her hand holding that of the other. Gentle, at Haggleton's right, was beaming with contentment.

They were examining plans, reading memoranda, commenting, discussing, asking questions and receiving prompt, clear replies.

Haggleton was happy.

He had taught many lessons, but learned one far greater than all those he had given.

He had learned to do his loving himself.

The battle was won.

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS

Goethe's famous play, "Faust," which will be the attraction at the Emma Porter as Marguerette in "Faust" at Plainfield Theatre Tonight.

Plainfield theatre tonight, presented by a superb supporting company, should attract the attention of all lover of clean drama. Those who are familiar with this poem of the greatest of all German poets need not be reminded that in it the battle of good against evil, of mankind against its inherent frailities, are aptly portrayed. Morrison's "Faust" is the version of the play, and the expectacular production with marvelous scenic, electric and magical effects is called, still after a decade, an unexampled prosperity, one of the best and most popular stage entertainments ever before the American public.

"The Traveling Salesman," by James Forbes, the author of "The Chorus Lady" will be seen in this city at the Plainfield theatre December 1, and the lasting qualities of the Forbes' comedy, its consistent strength as a popular magnet, are only more surprising than the true-to-life types and humor that delight every aduitor of this play, and not since the days of Charles Hoyt has a comedy enjoyed greater success than this James Forbes offering. New York, Boston and Chicago grew very fond of Bob Blake and Ted Watts, the "knights of the road," as they are characterized by Austin Webb and Dan Baker, and it is rarely indeed that a stage type is given the widespread vogue that Mr. Forbes has brought before us for that well-known American product, with graphic touches of human nature, breezy dialogue and energetic, wholesome humor. Following the well known policy of Henry B. Harris, whose productions of "The Third Degree," "The Lion and the Mouse," and other famous plays that have been seen in this city, "The Traveling Salesman" leaves nothing to be desired and it is marked with the same careful attention to details and staging as was manifest during the long run of this play in New York, Boston and Chicago.

The favorable effect of J. Hartley Manners' very clever play, as it is described, entitled "The House Next Door," is greatly enhanced, it is understood, by the fine comedy acting and sustained humor of J. E. Dodson's cameo-like impersonation of Sir John Cotswold, the old English baronet of the play. It is in "The House Next Door" that Mr. Dodson is starring under the management of Cohan and Harris, and it is in this piece that Mr. Dodson will be seen at the Plainfield theatre on Saturday night, December 4. This play has established a substantial claim to recognition for its excellent humor and real comedy spirit. Those who have seen this comdy in its travels and in New York in particular, where it was acted at the Gaiety theatre for the greater part of two seasons, say that it is a refreshing experience to sit through a representation which revolves neither about the seventh commandment, socialism, "new thought," nor auto-suggestion, but owes its being to the irascible temper of an old man, proud of his high lineage and intent on bending the views of all his family to coincide with his own prejudicial outlook on life. Mr. Dodson who first came to this country with the Kendals, and afterward remained to make himself still more noteworthy, gives one of the most finished performances of his notable career.

BEAT NEWARK AT SOCGER

Plainfield Association Club's Team Wins a Decisive Victory Here.

THE SCORE WAS 8 TO 0.

After the First Fifteen Minutes of Play, the Strollers Were on the Defensive.

The Plainfield Association Football Club had for its opponents Saturday afternoon the Newark Strollers, and the locals won a decisive victory, the score being 8 to 0 in their favor. The game was started at 3:15 o'clock, both teams being one man short. During the first fifteen minutes, play was very even, neither team having much advantage. Mitchell for Plainfield and J. Craig for the Strollers now appeared on the field and filled the vacancies.

A quick run down field by Spalding, and a marvelous cross shot from him, struck under the cross-bar and was breasted through by Heaume, making the score 1 to 0 for the locals. The visitors tried hard to equalize but to no avail, and a clever cross by Mitchell was caught by Heaume and banged through the goal. No more scoring took place in the first half and time was called with the home boys leading by two goals to none for the visitors.

On resuming play the Plainfield team immediately began to press and Spalding getting the ball at midfield, carried it along the wing and by a nice cross shot, succeeded in getting another goal. The Newark team was playing hard now, but the superior work of the home team was telling against them and in a few minutes Heaume took one more for Plainfield, making four goals.

In the next ten minutes play the visitors' goal was bombarded by the Plainfield forwards, and Heaume took one more goal. Mitchell took another inside of three minutes for the home team, but it was not allowed. Henderson and Sutton, of the home team, and Stewart, of the Strollers, were all injured, bu they remained on the field.

The visitors now realized that the game was entirely too much for them, and although they played hard, they could not score. Plainfield continued pressing and McKay scored another goal. The Newarkers now tried another rush, but the Plainfield defense was all that could be desired, and sent the ball forward again, and in a scrimmage Sutton made the seventh goal for Plainfield. At this stage of the game, the visitors seemed to fall away and the Plainfielders had everything their own way.

Spalding got the ball and took a quick run along the line, passed to McKay, who banged it through again. No more scoring took place and the game came to a close with the score standing 8 to 0 in favor of Plainfield. There was a large turn out of spectators to witness the game, and they cheered lustily at some of the brilliant rushes and fine plays. The lineup:

Plainfield—Stevenson, goal; Hosie, right back; Craig, left back; McCombe, right half; Henderson, centre half; Kenny, left half; Spalding, outside right; Mitchell, inside right; Heaume, centre; McKay, inside left; Sutton, outside left.

Newark Strollers—Booth, goal; Murray, right back; Colclough, left back; McKay, right half; J. Stewart, centre half; P. Stewart, left half; J. Craig, outside right; Laurie, inside right; Penwick, centre; Murdoch, inside left; Mess, outside left. Referee, Frank uBckland.

PLAINFIELD TRIUMPHS IN SPECTACULAR GAME

Brilliant perfomances by both teams characterized the basketball contest between the local Y. M. C. A. and Elizabeth Y. M. C. A. on Saturday night which was won by Plainfield by the score of 51 to 42. The locals clinched victory in the first half in which they led by the score of 31 to 20.

The visitors, in the final round, executed some great teamwork and played an even game. Bob Loeser, of the county seaters, was in the limelight with some pretty long shots to his credit. In that session he scored six goals from the field. Seiler, at center, also performed well for the visitors.

For the locals, Rumsey, Linke and Collier carried off the honors. The lineups:

Plainfield—Aalholm, Miner, Collier, forwards; Cahoone, center; Rumsey, Linke, guards. Elizabeth—Ross, Kirkland, forwards; Seiler, center; R. Loeser, Reeves, Manville, guards.

Goals from field—Aalholm, 7; Collier, 6; Rumsey, 7; Linke, 3; Kirkland, 5; Seiler, 4; R. Loeser, 7; Reeves, 2; Manville, 1. Goals by foul—Aalholm, 1; Collier, 4; Kirkland, 4.

N. P. H. S. Scores Double Victory.

North Plainfield High athletes scored a double victory at basketball in contests with teams of the Bernardsville High School at the latter place on Saturday. Two stagelloads of pupils made the trip which was under the supervision of Miss Helen Stahlberger, of the faculty The girls team was victorious by the score of 30 to 0 and the boys were victorious 19 to 0. The girls' team was composed of Bessie Conroy, Nettie Steiner, Marjorie Hart, Clara Smith and Helen George. The boy's combination was Conroy, H. Stine, C. Smith, P. Bailey, W. Taylor and Dunning.

WOMEN BETTER NURSES.

Jersey State Insane Asylum Discharging Its Force of Male Attendants.

Dr. Henry A. Cotton, superintendent of the State Hospital for the Insane at Trenton, is experimenting with women nurses for the male patients and doing away with male attendants. It is said that the small pay, $25 a month and board, will not permit of hiring the best men, and that the "accidents" which result in men dying of broken ribs may come from quarrels between the male patients and the male attendants.

Dr. Cotton believes that he can solve the whole difficulty by hiring women for most of the work. His observations are that the male patients seldom quarrel with the women attendants, and that in wards where women are there is less trouble, even with the advanced cases.

Favors Preventorium.

In an informal discussion last night Governor Fort made clear his position in regard to the tuberculosis preventorium for children, which has so roused Lakewood, declaring that he was not opposed to the location of such an institution in New Jersey and that today he would make reply to the letter of Marcus M. Marks, president of the preventorium.

MU SIGMA CAUSES HEAP OF TROUBLE

There's an ancient classic rhyme which contains these lines:

"When Greek meets Greek
Then comes the tug of war."

and the local school fraternity boys proved the truth of the couplet in a lively mix-up on the Cricket Field Field Saturday afternoon, when "the tug of war" was over four white Mu Sigma fraternity hats worn to the Holy Cross football game by Leal's School boys. The attack was by a party of "Wing Wangs," the P. H. S. Greek little frat, the classic name for which is also Mu Sigma.

The high school Greeks were first in the field, but they came not for war, since they believed that Mu Sigma meant only them. Wearing holiday togas, then, they gathered for the day's sport and strolled among the multitude burning the insense of peace.

But it happened that about the time that the contest began four Leal's School Greeks, clad in festal regalia, came likewise to witness the contest. And these wore snowy hats, with letters "Mu Sigma" blazoned in gold thereon and ribbon of a sunset hue circling the brim.

Now when the "Wing Wang" holiday makers espied those hats there was rage like as when Zews' thunder springs from heaven to earth, and each High School Greek cast his incense aside and swore a mighty oath. Then donned they each his brass knuckles and buckled on the greaves. And their leader harrangued them as follows:

"Let's walk into that bunch and knock them out from under those lids, notting the headgear for trophies." (Free translation).

So that host formed each man a hollow sqpare and advanced a Sabbath day's journey to suite the Lealonians. And by a pre-arranged attack, the white hats vanished. Then began the wordy war. One of the hats disappeared, but the tug of war waged lively over the other three, with a rapid interchange of "free translations."

With the peanut man as interpreter, surrounded by a dense throng, the Greeks argued long and bitterly. Prior right of organization was the main argument at the outset, but this was discarded in sworn statements that each frat was founded some time B. C.. A joint meeting will decide the question and it will be a case of survival of the fittest.

At both schools today there is consternation because of the report that there is a national school fraternity called Mu Sigma. "Hai! Hai!" (meaning "wurra wurra"), then must each club again seek the Greek dictionary and the snowy hats will be useless.

POWERFUL DRAMA SEEN AT THE NEW THEATRE.

The New Theatre, New York, which began its career two weeks ago, won a distinct triumph last Wednesday evening when it presented for the first time in America John Galsworthy's powerful drama, "Strife." Nothing approaching this remarkable presentation has been made in New York for years and the event proved without question that the playhouse, founded by thirty representative citizens in the interests of dramatic art, has already begun to fulfill its mission.

The theatre opened with a magnificent production of Shakespeare's "Antony and Cleopatra" and followed this three nights later with Edward Knoblauch's sanity, satrical comedy, "The Cottage in the Air." Then came "Strife," which will unquestionably be kept in the repertory the entire season. Its theme, its mob scene and its dramatic worth made a wonderful impression the opening night and the company itself won unstinted praise, as the opinions of able critics, excerpts of whose reviews are given.

SCHOOL EXPENDITURES BEING INVESTIGATED

Superintendent Henry M. Maxson has received from State Superintendent of Public Instruction Charles J. Baxter, of Trenton, a letter asking for an itemized statement of the money spent in this city for school purposes during the year. The request is made by Superintendent Baxter on behalf of the committee appointed by Governor Fort to investigate school expenses in the State. The information asked for is as follows:

List of textbooks adopted and the name of publishers.

Number of purchases during the year and the cost of each.

When last change in textbooks was made and how long discarded books had been in use.

The number of schoolhouses erected during the last five years, giving the number erected each year and the cost of each building, with the number of rooms and the number of pupils it will accommodate. If land was purchased, the cost of the land and the cost of the building stated separately.

So far as Plainfield is concerned, there is no apprehension on the part of the authorities as to the committee finding any unwise expenditure of the school funds. This city spends less per capita for the education of the children than any first or second-class city in the State, and at the same time the high standard of the schools has been maintained.

Members of the Board of Education feel confident that a more judicious and careful expenditure of school money can not be found in any other city in New Jersey, and the fact that the per capita cost for the education of the children is low in Plainfield is the strongest proof, they think, of the economical and yet effective plan under which the financial department of the Plainfield schools is conducted.

Chalmers-Detroit "30's" Won Every Event in their Class on Atlanta Speedway

During a week's racing on the new two mile Atlanta Motor Track, the Chalmers Detroit "30's", driven by Matson and Knipper, were never defeated in their class.

Think of going out day after day—the same two stock cars—and winning every race offered—from four to 100 miles.

Here is another remarkable fact: In every race which both "30's" were entered they won second place as well as first. BOTH "30's" defeated every other car of their class. They were always together neck and neck, at the finish.

Neither of them was out of commission at any time. The "30's" also won second place three times racing in the bigger car class—the only three races were entered in this class.

During the whole distance covered in all these races the "30's" averaged 60 miles an hour. A mile a minute for every minute they were running on the track.

There are no other cars in the world at any price with such records for consistency.

Members of the technical committee of the A. A. A. and Editors of the Automobile Trade Journals who keep careful records of automobile contests, both in America and Europe, are authority for the statement that the Chalmers Detroit "30's" hold the world's records for consistent performance.

Their records show that the Chalmers Detroit "30's" has won more events in proportion to the total number entered than any other car in the world.

The Chalmers Detroit "30's" sell for $1,500, and it is thoroughly proven to be the best car in the world for the price.

BIBLE AND FLAG FORMALLY PRESENTED WHEN WASHINGTON SCHOOL IS INSPECTED

S. St. John Mc Cutchen, of the State Board of Education, Mayor Fisk and Others Make Addresses at Darrow Ave. School Reception.

The presentation of a Bible and an American flag by Franklin, Somerset, Benevolent and Plainfield Councils, Jr. O. U. A. M., to the Washington Public School, afforded an excellent opportunity last night for an inspection of the handsome and well-equipped new building on Darrow avenue. Possession of the building was taken several weeks ago, but this was the first chance the public had to visit it and see what a fine structure the Board of Education had provided in that section of the city.

Among those who occupied seats on the platform in the assembly room were Mayor Charles Joel Fisk, President Leander N. Lovell, Floyd T. Woodhull, William S. Tyler, of the Board of Education; Dr. Henry M. Maxson, superintendent of schools; Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, S. St. John McCutchen, a member of the State Board of Education, and the following representatives of the four Jr. O. U. A. M. Councils: Walter Firstbrook, Walter C. Walker, Joel Pennington, Nelson Van Winkle, Thomas E. Currin, Jr., Joseph D. Moon and W. I. Cubberly. Councilmen Frederick E. Mygatt, Herbert Buxton and Duncan W. Taylor were also present.

A large delegation of members from the Jr. O. U. A. M. Councils occupied seats reserved for them in the main part of the assembly hall. A large chorus of school children was present and under the direction of Charles L. Lewis, musical director of the schools, rendered several popular songs.

As president of the Board of Education, Leander N. Lovell presided at the exercises. He introduced the first speaker, S. St. John McCutchen, as the president of the State Board of Education, but the latter in responding said that J. L. Hayes, of Newark, was filling that position most acceptably and he declined to take the honors. He called attention to the beautiful new school building, which he said represented the very latest in modern construction.

"I would like to show you some of the school buildings in the rural districts of the State," continued Mr. McCutchen. "They are wretched boxes. The school authorities there cannot do what you have done, because they have not the facilities. There are more than 2,000 school buildings in the State and our system of education costs about $15,000,000 a year.

"After all, it is what is done right here in the school room that counts. I have reason to believe that there is lots of poor work done. Everything possible is furnished here for education, but you as parents have your part to perform in helping your boys and girls to keep up to the mark and secure an education. I congratulate both you and the Board of Education for securing this fine building which I trust will always be a monument to the best effort in education."

Rev. W. A. Knox, pastor of the Methodist church, Dunellen, and a member of the Jr. O. U. A. M., was chosen to present the Bible to the school on behalf of the order and his remarks were listened to with much interest and heartily applauded.

"America has offered the opportunity for the best of all lands to come here and improve their education," said Mr. Knox, "and this country today is drawing the best blood from all quarters of the globe. America longs for the best and is only too anxious to give everyone an education. We are told that the public school system here is the best in the State and we are proud of it. The public school is a big institution for it qualified boys and girls to become useful men and women in business and society.

"I represent an order, the Jr. O. U. A. M., which realizes that the public school is one of the greatest benefits to a community, and as we are told that 'every good and perfect gift comes from God,' and that His best gift is His Son, the next best gift is His Holy Book, the Bible.

"The Juniors feel that the children ought to know this Book, which is the highest ethical code. If I were a Hebrew and a believer in the Old Testament, I would want the Bible in the public school. I would want the New Testament read for it tells of the noblest Hebrew of them all; the best Jew that ever lived on earth.

"Were I a Pagan I would want this Bible read in the public schools for it teaches the glad hand and warm heart and tells how to treat our brother right. Were I an infidel or did not believe in God or anything, I would want the Bible read, for it teaches love, it lifts and elevates one to a high standard of living and thinking.

"If I were a Catholic I would want the Bible read in the public schools. I would not want anyone to say that I was afraid to study the best and follow the best to be found in this wonderful Book. If you find after studying the Book that the Church has something better to offer, why, a person can then follow the teachings of the Church. One cannot properly understand history, art, poetry or even read the daily newspaper intelligently without a knowledge of the Bible. It enlightens all who read it and teaches that which is best. It now gives me great pleasure to present to the Washing-

CHURCH AND SOCIALISM

Reasons Given by Minister Why Socialism Can't Be Endorsed.

POINTS OUT ITS DEFECTS.

The Rev. Charles Stelzle Addresses the Monday Afternoon Club at the Auditorium.

Rev. Charles Stelzle, superingtendent of the department of church and labor of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, gave reasons "Why the Church cannot practically endorse Socialism," in an earnest and thoughtful lecture before the Monday Afternoon Club yesterday at the Hartridge School auditorium. Socialism, the speaker regarded as one of the most important questions of the day, varying in different countries and in its representatives in each country.

Rev. Mr. Stelzle gave the definition common to most socialist platforms, the ownership by the people of all the means of production, distribution and exchange and said the church was asked to be sponsor for the socialist belief, and if it did not undertake its advocacy speedily the masses would be alienated from the church.

In reply, he claimed that the advocates of socialism did not fill the churches, that they did not even agree in their ideas of what they wished to accomplish, that the early church, said by the socialists to be a pattern, did not represent socialism, but communism, and that was voluntary, that it was inaugurated as a temporary expedient, and that it pauperized the Jerusalem church and was a complete failure.

The brotherhood that was of value said Rev. Mr. Stelzle, was that which helped the brother to create wealth. The mission of the church, he considered, was to preach to individuals the prinicples taught by Jesus Christ and these principles were to be applied individually to social problems.

Another reason given by Mr. Stelzle why the church could not advocate socialism was that it was not a permanent solution of the labor problems. If it met the needs of the twentieth century, there was no assurance it would suffice for the needs of the twenty-first century. The church, he said, had no right to advocate theories which are not applicable to any generation. You can only have an ideal socialism when you have ideal men.

Mr. Seltzle in closing, told of the day when men and women would dedicate their children to God and Labor, as Samuel was dedicated to the ministry of the Temple.

CHARMING LUNCHEON GIVEN FOR DEBUTANTE

Mrs. R. Henry Depew, of Hillside avenue, gave a charming luncheon this afternoon for her niece, Miss Margaret Drayton, daughter of Mrs. John B. Drayton, who last week was introduced to society at a brilliant affair given at the Plainfield Country Club. It was a pink luncheon and the guests, including Miss Drayton, numbered eight.

The guests were Miss Anita Fraley, Miss Helen Timpson, Miss Carolyn Martin, Miss Edith Mellick, Miss Elizabeth Tweedy, Miss Katharine McCutcheon, Miss Verna McCutcheon and Miss Margaret Drayton. On Tuesday afternoon next, Mrs. George P. Mellick, of East Seventh street, will give a luncheon for Miss Drayton.

WORLD TRIP SUBJECT OF SENATOR'S TALK

State Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, who recently returned from a pleasure trip abroad, gave a delightful illustrated lecture at the First M. E. church, last night, on the subject, "An Attractive Pathway Around the World." Senator Ackerman displayed in all 130 of the finest views yet seen here. These were reproductions of pictures taken by Mr. Ackerman while abroad and all of them works of art.

Especially note worthy were the ocean scenes and those depicting scenes in Holland, Germany and other foreign countries. Aside from the beautiful views shown, the large audience thoroughly enjoyed the interesting explanatory talk by Senator Ackerman. His thorough knowledge of the countries through which he passed and his entertaining manner in describing scenes and incidents, made it a most profitable lecture. The affair was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the First M. E. church, the proceeds being for the furnishing fund of ths chapel.

FAMILY TROUBLES ARE AIRED IN COURT

The complaint of Mrs. Theodore Wilson against her husband for non-support brought to light a curious mixture of affairs in his family relations which it will take some time to unravel. Mrs. Wilson with a baby in her arms appeared in court this morning, while her husband was on hand to hear the complaint read. He had been detained at Police headquarters awaiting the hearing. When the judge held out the Bible to swear Mrs. Wilson, she held back, saying she had no complaint to make. She averred that the complaint was not made by her, but at the instigation of meddling neighbors.

A sister of Wilson told about the way the family had been supported and that the only reason the wife and children were temporarily out of a house was that they rightfully had refused to live in quarters with certain colored people. She testified also that Wilson had always supported his family and that there was no room for complaint. Mrs. Wilson is considered to be slightly weak. The family is now living in a house in the "big woods" at Westfield.

In order to allow for further investigation by the police Judge Runyon postponed the case for two weeks and allowed Wilson to go on his own recognizance.

HE KNOWS.

Joseph H. Appell, general manager of the Philadelphia store of John Wanamaker, is a buyer of advertising, not a seller, and so his opinion of the power of publicity is well worth reprinting. He says:

"Advertising is capital, not expense. It is the real producer of wealth. It lights factory fires, keeps the wheels of industry amove, spans continents with railroads and sends the ships of commerce in never-ending circles round the globe. It is the nearest approach to perpetual motion yet known.

"Advertising is the great builder. It builds business; it builds fortunes; it builds homes and communities and cities and nations. But its highest work is in upbuilding humanity. The Constitution and the church follow the flag, but both the flag and the missionaries follow business created through advertising.

"Advertising is the great educator: the great humanizer; the great civilizer. It teaches a better way of living; a better way of furnishing homes; a better way of managing our affairs."

PLANT TO LOCATE HERE

Silk Manufacturing Concern to Be Established in the East End.

START OPERATIONS JANUARY 1.

The Somerset Mills, Incorporated at Paterson, With $100,000 Capital, Get Silver Plate Factory.

Plainfield is to have another big manufacturing plant and the industry will be established in the factory building formerly occupied by the William H. Rogers Silver Plate Company on North avenue in the East End. It is reported that the concern will be in readiness to start operations by January 1. The Somerset Mills is the name of the company which was incorporaed with a capitalization of $100,000 in Paterson last Saturday. The value of the stock in the new concern is placed at $100 share. In addition to conducting the local plant the concern will also have a mill at Paterson.

In the incorporation papers which have been filed the names of three Paterson lawyers are given, Albin Smith, Walter R. Hudson and Barton H. Walker. For business reason the real owners of the company do not appear in the incorporation documents, but it is the presumption that the prime movers in the formation of the new company are men who have been prominently identified in the silk and cotton world.

The introduction of another silk company to this city is taken as an indication of a boom in the manufacture of silk and cotton fabrics. Since July the market has been a bit dull but the two local manufacturers now see signs of improvement.

Eugene M. Laing, one of the principle owners in the Watchung Mills, when apprised of the intentions of the new company to etsablish itself here, assumed an optimistic air. "The more, the better. There is room for several more silk mills here. The industry has improved the industrial conditions of the city to a great extent."

ENTERTAINMENT FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOL PUPILS

The second of the series of four entertainments was given at the Park Avenue Baptist church last night, under the direction of Superintendent George E. Hall of the Sunday-school. There was a large and appreciative audience. The moving pictures were exceptionally fine and presented scenes that were both amusing and instructive, including such subjects as "How Bread is Made," "The Life of the Banana," "Two Boys' Half Holiday," "The Little Waif," "The Disaster of the Republic, etc.

Tommy Dobson, of New York, entertained the audience with a number of humorous monologues and comic songs. His imitation of child life was especially good and his impersonation of "The Village School Teacher" furnished amusement for everyone.

The Sunday-school orchestra led by Arthur S. Mosher, violinist, rendered several selections, which added to the attractiveness of the program. Miss Mary E. Clark presided at the piano.

The offering was received by the Misses Anna Clark, Mary Leveridge, Marion Mortimer, Lillian Cuming, Sarah Boyd and Alice Brown, all members of the school. Mr. Hall stated that another entertainment of a similar nature would be given Monday evening, to which the public is invited. No admission fee is charged.

Mrs. C. Edward Fincke Entertains.

Mrs. C. Edward Fincke, of South avenue, entertained a number of friends at her home last night, in honor of her birthday anniversary. A feature was a birthday cake, and an informal program of music. Mrs. Fincke received a number of gifts as reminders of the occasion. During the evening refreshments were served. William Gladstone Mangan sang popular songs.

Violin Recital Tonight.

Music lovers will have an opportunity of listening to a choice program at Y. M. C. A. hall tonight when Miss Florence Austin will give a violin recital. Miss Austin will be assisted by Miss Marian Austin, at the piano. The program will include selections from Handel, Schubert, Beethoven, Viotte and other noted composers.

WORK OF CHARITY ORGANIZATION SOCIETY IS REVIEWED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING

Problems That Confront the Association and How They are Solved, Interestingly Told by Agent Who Gives Some Statistics.

"Seventy-five per cent. of the cases of desertion occur among the colored population," so says the report of the agent of the Charity Organization Society, read at the society's annual meetng last night in the Crescent Avenue church. Industrial improvement has been the cause of the decrease in cases of destitution which the society has had to relieve. But with the 156 cases now in hand, representing 652 individuals, the work of the society shows no diminution.

According to the statistics furnished in the report thirty-nine per cent. of the cases were married couples, only eight per cent. widows and sixty-three per cent. were native Americans. In other words the beneficiaries of the society are like its supporters, for the most part normal American citizens, living in private homes and bearing burdens of misfortune which entitle them to the help and consideration of all.

It is significant to note that in fifty-four cases out of the ninety-one lack of employment has been the cause of distress. But the agent's efforts to place men and women at work have been only partly successful, owing to a lack of co-operation with employers and applicants. Fifty-six such places have been found, possibly many more but no absolute knowledge of the success of the work can be had owing to carelessness in replying on the part of employers and employed. If more attention were paid to this point the system could be greatly improved.

Tuberculosis is responsible for many of the cases of inability to work. One case of this dread disease was cited by the agent. It was that of a deserted mother and four children. The mother was afflicted with the disease and one of her two children who slept in the same bed with her was also afflicted. These two were finally accepted at the State Sanitorium at Glen Gardner and as a result the mother has been discharged cured and the little girl is improving. Desertion was the primary cause of the above case and the report says that seventy-five per cent. of the cases of desertion are among the colored people. Thirteen per cent. of the total cases this year were involved with desertion.

Efforts have been made in each case by the Overseer of the Poor and by the Agent of the Society to locate the deserter and make him responsible for the support of his family. But when a clergyman is so little suspicious as to marry a man who already has a wife and family living in this city, to a woman equally negligible, the ensuing entanglement is rather too much for either the judicial or State agencies to solve.

The Agent's report is full of data of interest to those who think at all of the needs and requirements of the city's poor. It shows that 156 cases have been given attention with good results and that while there is an apparent balance in the treasury the $113.95 is actually employed. The total receipts for the year amounted to $3,339.96. In truancy cases from the schools an assistant is very much needed. Miss Holly's work is altogether too much for one person and with one other helper the efficiency of the work could be greatly increased, at least fifty per cent.

On motion of Dr. Murray the society authorized the printing of the entire report, which will be done as soon as possible so that every body may become familiar with the work of the society. Referring to the new tuberculosis pavilion President Fox said that it had cost $2,615, which was a little more than was originally expected. He said that tomorrow six approved patients would be admitted under the care of a nurse who herself has been a victim of tuberculosis and whose experience would be invaluable to the Tuberculosis Society. It will cost from $200 to $250 per month to maintain the pavilion and if the public does not respond with the funds necessary to carry on the work it will have to be abandoned.

After the reading of the reports H. L. De Forest moved that the present fifteen "immortals," meaning the trustees, be re-elected and to make it legal moved that the secretary cast one ballot for them. The motion was carried without a dissenting voice.

Mrs. Samuel Huntington read the report of the secretary of the relief committee and Miss Lillian Moore did a like service for the treasurer of the same committee.

The treasurer's report read by Mrs. W. G. Wright gave the figures already quoted. The trustees elected are: Henry L. De Forest, Hugh F. Fox, Henry M. Maxson, Samuel St. John McCutchen, John Duall Miller, Dr. William H. Murray, Mrs. Mary S. Myers, Miss Mabel E. Pierson, Mrs. Charles E. Ryder, Mrs. Henry Lapsley, W. W. Taylor, Miss Elizabeth Tiffany, William S. Tyler, William M. Wherry and William G. Wright. Rev. Dr. John S. Zelie was an interested listener to the various reports and his church was given a vote of thanks for the use of the church parlors where the meeting was held.

TENANT NOT TO BLAME, DISCHARGED BY COURT

John Manley, of Park avenue, who complained that Mrs. Andrew Nelson, a former tenant had torn, maliciously, the paper from the wall in a room in the house at 317 Park avenue had his complaint dismissed by Judge William Runyon in the city court this morning, as Mr. Manley could not prove that Mrs. Nelson had committed the act wantonly. Mrs. Nelson was defended by Attorney J. Henry Crane. Mr. Manley said after the trial was over that he would take the case to a higher court, but there is no appeal in such matters.

In presenting his side of the case to the court Mr. Manley said that his action was solely a philanthropic one, having in mind the protection of other landlords in this city. He thinks, he says, that something ought to be done to prevent recurrences of similar cases and he will do all that lies in his power to stop the practices some tenants have of demolishing the property of the owners. However, in this case, according to the evidence produced by Mrs. Nelson and a witness, the wall paper fell off because the wall of the room were not the kind that paper sticks to anyhow.

SHE TOLD A SAD TALE TO GET AWAY FROM HOME

Mary Smith, a colored girl, aged twelve, was picked up in the street here Saturday by John Hartwell and his wife, colored, of Perth Amboy, and after listening to her tearful tale of being homeless and an orphan they took her with them to their home on Gordon street, in that city. The child was reported lost yesterday and from inquiries at various points she was located at the Hartwell house. Hartwell claims that the child was weeping and told him she was unable to tell where she had lived, but that she had been maltreated and did not care to hunt up her foster parents.

This morning it was ascertained that the girl wanted to come home as she was homesick. She then confessed to having lied about her parents and gave her address as 560 West Second street, this city. This is the home of the Smiths. A note was found under the door of the house last night saying that the Smith girl could be found at the address in Perth Amboy.

Up to noon today she had not been returned to her parents. The local police are investigating the case.

A scare was caused in the western part of the village Saturday afternoon when a supposed mad dog bit the young son of Daniel G. Webster. The announcement that Rev. John R. Mason would tell the congregation at Millville Sunday night who is the most wicked man in Millville brought out a large attendance, which filled the First Methodist Episcopal church. The pastor said that there are men in Millville who are drunkards, swindlers, gamblers, men who are licentious and addicted to the use of profanity. These, he said, are wicked, but the most wicked man is "He who knoweth his duty and doeth it not."

Late Saturday night five drunken colored men employed at the Bordentown brick yards boarded a Camden and Trenton trolley car at Bordentown on its way to Trenton, intending to go as far as the Mile Hollow, near the works. They broke windows in the car by throwing stones and bottles. The car was run back to Bordentown and several officers went to the scene in the car, but none of the rowdies has been apprehended.

SPORTS HERE AND THERE

GOLF.

Unable to tear themselves away from the ideal conditions, many golfers lingered at the Country Club of Lakewood Sunday, with the result that the aftermath was almost as interesting as the tournament. A four-ball match which attracted general attention had Fred Herreshoff, Garden City, and Findlay S. Douglas, of Nassau, as partners against Jerome D. Travers, of Montclair, and W. R. Simons. The last named is one of the best of the Dyker Meadow set and was put out in the second round of last week's tournament by Walter J. Travis after a fairly close match.

It was figured, however, that Herreshoff and Douglas would prove a trifle too formidable for the other pair, and consequently the Lakewood winner and his Scotch partner started the other pair 2 up. In this way the morning round ended all square, neither combination appearing at its best. The golf in the afternoon, however, was brilliant, especially that of Herreshoff and Douglas.

With a best ball of 38 out they had their opponents one down at the turn. The leaders then struck a great pace, working in five 3's on the homeward journey, and with a 32 returned a best ball of 70, good enough to win by 3 up and 2 to play. Douglas himself had a 73 and Herreshoff a 75, while the best ball of Travers and Simons was 75.

Golfers the country over are invited to participate in an open tournament to be held over the links of the Atlanta Athletic Club on December 16 and 17. Amateurs as well as professionals are welcome, and prizes to the amount of $500 will be awarded, either in cash or plate. Conditions call for seventy-two holes of medal play, thirty-six holes each day.

This will be the first tournament of its kind ever held in Georgia, and the committee expects a large entry. As that is about the time professionals will be working their way Southward, the chances are that as many as can conveniently do so will time their trips so as to stop over at Atlanta for the tournament.

Equal to the Occasion.

A young couple entered a railway carriage and were immediately put down as a bridal pair, says the Boston Herald. But they were remarkably self-possessed, and behaved with such sangfroid that the other passengers began to doubt.

As the train moved out the young man rose to take off his overcoat, and a shower of rice fell out. The passengers smiled broadly.

But even that did not affect the youth, who also smiled, and, turning to his partner, remarked, audibly:

"By Jove, May! I've stolen the bridegroom's overcoat!"

LOCAL AMUSEMENTS.

For the first time in the history of the stage, a play has been written dealing with that most interesting type of American, namely, "The Traveling Salesman," and which will be seen at the Plainfield theatre Wednesday night. It was written by James Forbes, the author of "The Chorus Lady," which means that a first-class entertainment filled with laughs is assured. Its title, "The Traveling Salesman," indicates mirth and merriment, projected in a manner unique and interesting.

The man who likes to laugh heartily will have his risibilities aroused on Saturday night at the Plainfield theatre, when J. E. Dodson, the distinguished character actor, known to theatre-goers for more than twenty years, will appear in the stellar role of J. Hartley Manners' comedy, "The House Next Door." This comedy was played at the Gaiety theatre, New York, for the better part of two seasons. Mr. Dodson interprets a crusty, crabby, disagreeable old aristocrat, whose irrascibility is so intense that it is positively amusing.

CIVIL SERVICE LAW SAFE

The Ackerman Statute Has Proven Satisfactory and Will Not Be Attacked.

A LONGER TEST IS FAVORED.

Law Which Provides for a Business-like Method of Selecting Public Officials Is Popular In This State.

Although a number of prominent New Jersey men, notably former Governors Franklin Murphy and John W. Griggs, have expressed doubt about the wisdom and practicability of the State Civil Service, which was fathered by Senator Ernest R. Ackerman, of Union county, and piloted by him through the strong opposition that manifested itself against the measure in the Legislature of 1908, none of those who have dealt with the subject have taken the position that the Ackerman law should be repealed. Messrs. Murphy and Griggs both expressed themselves as willing to await a longer test of the law than has yet been given, and their view in this respect is reflected in a similar attitude by many other politicians who are not yet willing to give unqualified approval of the measure which is devised to minimize, if not ultimately to completely destroy, the evils of the spoils system as related to the public service.

There have been suggestions that the Civil Service law may be repealed by the Legislature, but those who keep in close touch with public sentiment in New Jersey see no evidence that such an attempt will be made until the Ackerman law has had a more thorough test than is acknowledged to be possible under its operation for a little over a year.

During the thirteen months that the Civil Service law has been in effect in New Jersey there has been no serious complaint that the law has worked disadvantageously, while on the other hand many State officials are high in their praise of results obtained under it. Were the general tendency of the New Jersey view otherwise, it would be in marked contradiction to the experience of the Federal government based on results obtained since the National Civil Service statute was put in effect during the administration of President Harrison twenty years ago.

With respect to civil service reform, it is a fair inference to draw that New Jersey's average opinion will be very much like that which prevails in the Federal government. After two decades of practical experience, Uncle Sam's view is that civil service is a business-like method of selecting public officials and employes. All the testimony that has been adduced on the subject serves to emphasize the assertion that civil service secures employes capable and honest, the accrued result of which is an administration that is more economical and efficient that under the spoils system of appointment for political reasons.

The business value of civil service reform, as experienced in the Federal government, is epitomized in the statement by the United States Civil Service Commission that "as a result of the operation of the civil service rules a net saving in salaries paid, of at least ten per cent."

A sidelight which amplifies this view is supplied in a brief recital of the experience in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows: "Under the old (spoils) system, prior to a change of administration the work of the clerks in the department fell off nearly half, and it took the successors of those who were displaced at least six months to learn their duties. Accepting the average salary of a government clerk as about $800, this would mean, in Presidential years at least, that nearly half this salary was wasted, no return being obtained by the people for the amount paid out."

The last report of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing shows that, notwithstanding the work of that bureau had increased over 77 per cent. the force (picked under and protected by civil service) had only increased 11 per cent. An investigation made by a commission of Treasury experts into the work of this bureau prior to the enactment of the civil service law found the force largely in excess of requirements for the service.

That the maintenance of the government Civil Service Commission is directly in the interest of economy is shown by the statistics prepared last year in connection with the government service in Washington. In these statistics the growth of the classified position was compared with the growth of the unclassified positions, and it appeared that since the organization of the commission the unclassified positions, which have been subject to political control, have increased in number 37 per cent. and in cost 43 per cent., while the classified positions subject to examinations have remained at a standstill, practically the only increase in their number having been made by extensions of the rules to cover places previously unclassified. Had the classified positions increased in the same proportion as the unclassified ones, an extra annual expenditure of $3,000,000, or twenty times the cost of maintaining the commission, would have been required.

In his report the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service states that during a period of ten years the amount of mail matter handled has increased 77 per cent., but that the increase in force has been only 48 per cent.

HALF OF WESTFIELD POLICE FORCE RESIGNS

Half of the night police force of Westfield, consisting of four men, have sent in their resignations, it is said, and, it is expected, other resignations will be sent in to the Common Council within the coming week. If this is done the probabilities are that Westfield will be without police protection during the night. Under an ordinance a man must be a resident of this town two years before he can be appointed to the force. The Council has several applications for positions as policemen, but as none of the applicants have lived there the required length of time, they cannot be appointed. It is said that an appeal to have the ordinance revised will be made.

"Conditions are rotten," was the declaration of Police Commissioner Floyd, chairman of the board, after its meeting last night. The commission will meet again tonight and ask the Council to amend the ordinance. The salary paid the police is $70 per month.

Sergeant Martin Caufield, it is said, is to blame for the muddle, for recently he has been keeping tabs on the night squad, and his reports were that he found some asleep and neglectful. Policeman Joseph Beck was the first to sever his connection with the department. He turned in his resignation last night and Policeman Leonard Collins will do so today, it is said.

For the past few nights the town has been policed by three men, as there are no specials. If the ordinance is not changed soon there is a possibility of the town being without police at night unless the four day men are shifted or divided so as to make it two during the day and the same number at night.

SUMMIT BONIFACE HAS NARROW ESCAPE.

Information of the narrow escape of Frank M. Curtis, Jr., proprietor of the Hotel Beechwood, at Summit, from being killed by a bullet from a revolver in the hand of a Servian night watchman a week ago Sunday night, leaked out yesterday. Mr. Curtis, while not quite sure that the discharge of the gun was accidental, gave the night watchman the benefit of the doubt, and would not cause his arrest.

Mr. Curtis said that he found it necessary to discharge the Servian on Sunday night, because of frequent complaints made against him by the female employes of the hotel. The hotel proprietor went into the billiard-room and informed the night watchman that his services were no longer required. The discharged employe pulled the hotel keys out of his pocket, and with them a thirty-eight caliber revolver. As he passed the keys over to Mr. Curtis the revolver was discharged, and a bullet tore through Mr. Curtis' clothing across the abdomen.

Finding that he was uninjured, and that the only damage done was the burning of a hole in his coat by the bullet, the hotel proprietor quickly snatched the weapon from the night watchman, who immediately ran from the hotel into the street. Mr. Curtis found him near the hostelry later, and, after paying him the wages due him, saw to it that he got out of the city. The hotel proprietor said that he has had many scrimmages with employes, in which meat cleavers and knives had been brought into play by the discharged help, but this experience with the night watchman had been his most narrow escape from death.

BIBLE AND FLAG PRESENTED

ton School this handsome Bible."

Great applause followed the remarks of Mr. Knox and Mr. Lovell in a brief speech accepted the gift on behalf of the Board of Education and the taxpayers of the city.

After the singing of a song by the chorus of children, Mr. Lovell introduced Mayor Charles Joel Fisk, who presented the American flag to the school on behalf of the Jr. O. U. A. M.

He said:

"We are gathered together here tonight for the purpose of dedicating this building to the education of the children of this generation and of many generations to come, and it seems fitting at this time that we should have a short review or history of the school system in this community. In order to obtain the history as stated, I have examined several authorities and reports, but the early history of the schools I have taken from the History of Plainfield, compiled by F. T. Smiley.

"Plainfield has always been noted for its good schools and interest taken in all educational matters. The first mention we find of a school in Plainfield is in the year 1760, next in the 1800 a school house was erected at the corner of Front and Peace streets, but the first organized effort for the education of children was found June 4, 1811, when the Plainfield School Society was organized. This society consisted of five men: John Wilson, Samuel Manning, John Manning, Benjamin Lains and Frederick Vermeule. The descendants of some of these are still living in this city. These men acted as trustees and the funds for a school house were subscribed by the citizens and a school house erected on West Front street. This organization continued until 1835 when the upper part of the building was burned out. At this time there were two schools organized, one by the Presbyterians on East Front street, which was first called the "Classical Academy," afterwards the Plainfield Seminary, the Greenbrook Private Family School and the Plainfield Female Institute, where the English branches were taught. Owing to the activity of the Presbyterians, the Baptist got busy about this time and started a school called the "Plainfield Classical Institute." In a paper published at that time called the "Plainfield Herald," volume one, No 6, dated October 22, 1835, published by Isaac Cole, both of these institutions were advertised.

"The Plainfield Seminary had a building forty by thirty-six feet and three teachers, while the Plainfield Classical Institute had a building sixty by thirty-five feet and five teachers. The last named institution seemed to believe in advertising, together with cuts of their building and a statement that English and also a complete scientific, mathematical and collegeate course of instruction were given. They went into greater detail to state that a course of instruction would be given in the construction of maps, and the use of globes, rhetoric, logic, the French, Latin, Greke and Hbrew languages, Ancient and Modern history, natural, theology, philosophy, moral, intellectual and political; further on the advertisement reads: 'Young ladies are also instructed in the solid branches of education.' The terms $15.00 to $20.00 per session of twenty-four weeks. Board may be obtained in private families for a $1.75 to $2.00 per week, exclusive of washing.' Then went on to state: 'The Trustees of the Institution used every exertion to make it rank with the best literary and scientific seminaries of the day. The teachers are men of talent and experience, and are believed to be fully capable of instructing their pupils well and governing them with skill and judgment of conscientious and affectionate disciplinarians. The advertisement closed with this paragraph: 'We anticipate the day when Plainfield will become extensively and justly noted as a place of education; and we would encourage every laudable effort for that purpose and make known as widely as possible to parents and guardians the advantages of our village and its schools.'

"Remember that this advertisement appeared nearly seventy-five years ago and the statement made in this last paragraph at that time can well be repeated today.

"In addition to these two schools, there were several private schools carried on in private houses, and a tuition was charged in all the various schools. A small amount of money was received from the State and paid by the trustees to some school for the tuition of indigent children. This brings us up to 1847, when the township of Plainfield was set off.

"Up to this time, the schools in Plainfield and also in other parts of the State, had a very uncertain existence. Immediately after the formation of the Township, Dr. Charles H. Stillman was appointed superintendent, and his first step was to consolidate the two school districts then existing into one, and form the Plainfield School District No. 1. Dr. Stillman may well be called the founder of the free public school, not only in Plainfield, but in the State of New Jersey, as it was through his work the bills that he had introduced and had passed in the Legislature, that our public school system was started on a firm foundation. Finding that there were not enough pupils to support two pail academies and not enough money could be raised under the laws at that time to run a public school, he called a meeting of the citizens and at that meeting had a resolution passed to petition the Legislature to repeal the law preventing the school district from raising more than twice the amount that they received from the State for school purposes. Also had elected the first school board. This school board consisted of eight members, one from each church, and it appears for some reason that the following year that the board was increased to ten members. Under new State law passed that year the school board found that they could not pay public money to private schools for the tuition of indigent pupils. The board appointed a committee to confer with the teachers of the private schools in town and endeavor to arrange with some one of them to become a public school, but in every instance the proposition was rejected. Having no building and no money to erect a building, the board looked around for some suitable quarters, and on August 16, 1847, opened two schools, one in a hatter's shop on West Front street near Grove, and the other n a cabinetmaker's shop on East Front street near Watchung avenue.

"The school records show that Messrs. Lenox and Uuning offered to take both schools at $26.00 per month and find fire wood, pens and ink. School opened with an enrollment of one hundred and sixty-seven pupils, and an average attendance for the first quarter of one hundred and twenty-eight. At the end of the first quarter the public funds were found to be not sufficient, and an assessment of $1.00 per quarter was levied on all able to pay, so that even at this time, the schools were not strictly free. A meeting of the voters was then called by Dr. Stillman and at that meeting resolutions were passed that application be made to the Legislature now in session for an act empowering the inhabitants of Plainfield School District No. 1 to raise money by tax for the erection of a school house and support of public school in said district, the amount to be determined at the annual town meeting. This bill was presented to the Legislature by Elston Marsh, through his efforts was passed by the Legislature and signed by Governor Daniel Haines, March 8, 1848.

"A town meeting was then called and $1,200.00 appropriated for school building, which amount was afterwards increased. Land was bought at the corner of West Fourth street and Arlington avenue, bids for putting up the building were advertised for, and the first school building erected in this district. This building was thirty by fifty feet, with stores, costng $2,200; later an addition was added to double the capacity of the school, costing about $1,400.00, making the cost of the school house erected about $3,600.00. This building was opened on November, 1848, with three teachers and an average attendance of two hundred and three. This was the only school building until the year 1867, then was found that more accommodations were needed for the more advanced scholars and land was secured on the corner of Fifth street, where the first high school was erected, this building is still standing and in use by the city. This school was called after Dr. Stillman, the 'Stillman School,' and cost about $30,000.

"The first building was burned in 1882, and the present Franklin School was erected on the same site at a cost of about $30,000. In 1847 the Washington School was erected at a cost of $22,000. In 1886 the Bryant School at a cost of $36,000, and later an addition was made to this, costing about $15,000. In 1888 the Irving School at a cost of $35,000. In 1897 the Lincoln School for $27,000. Then the Whittier for $14,000. The present High School at a cost of $125,000, and last of all this building, which is to be called the "Washington School," the old Washington School having been sold for $95,000. The school board have adopted plans, bought the land and are about to erect a building on Dunellen avenue for a primary school, at a cost of $45,000. When this is finished we will have school properties in ths city, together with furnishings, etc., at a conservative valuation of $550,000. These buildings have been paid for in various ways, mortgages and bonds, which have been paid off in installments from time to time, and today there is a total indebtedness on our school property of about $300.000. Starting in 1847 school was conducted in rented rooms, wth two teachers and 128 scholars, we have have steadily grown until today we have eight school houses and one in process of erection, making nine, 3,362 scholars and 100 teachers.

"The first report of the Board of Education published in 1848, shows a total expenditure of $681, the school budget today, will, exclusive of payments on account of bonds and interest, show an expenditure of about $130,000. Of this $130,000 about $87,000 represents the salaries paid the teachers; $10,000 for clerk and janitors; and $12,000 for medical inspectors, making $101,845.90 put out in salaries. The balance for fuel, lighting, supplies, printing, insurance ,repairs and various other items.

"One of the easiest things in this world is for one to critcise the work of another in an official capacity, and the members of our school board come in for their share of public criticism. These men are elected, serve without salary and, if any taxpayer will take the trouble to investigate their action or look into the affairs of the school board, he will find that the schools are administered by high minded, conscientious men, who have given their time and energy to securing for the city of Plainfield the best system of schools possible for the least amount of money. These men have made mistakes, we all do at times, but they must be credited with the highest motives of procuring for Plainfield as good schools, if not the best of anywhere in this State.

"It might be well to add here the men in addition to Dr. Charles H. Stillman, who have given their time and attention to school matters; some of them are now dead and gone, others still living; we find the names of Randolph Runyon, R. M. Titsworth, Jacob Kirkner, L. E. Clark, Rev. J. H. Vincent, Edward M. Brown, John W. Murray, William B. Stuart, Nathan Harper, Mason W. Tyler, George H. Babcock, John B. Probasco, Rev. J. H. Hurlhburt, E. L. Finch, Fred C. Lounsbury, L. F. Wadsworth, Rev. W. R. Richards, Dr. O. L. Jenkins. Our present school board: L. N. Lovell, C. H. Abbott, F. T. Woodhull, W. S. Tyler, J. F. Buckle.

"With men of this character it would be very hard for any one to accuse our school board of any ulterior motive. Some times the board has been charged with extravagance, but this is a mistake. Every item, even the smallest article is bought at a very close price. In regard to the pay of teachers, there was an advancement made two years ago, which increased the salaries about $10,000. I am responsible to a certain extent for brining about this increase, as I urged the school board, both privately and also through a message to the Common Council, to increase the salaries. It was found we were loosing our best teachers because we were not paying salaries equal to salaries paid in other places, neither were we playing salaries that would permit the teachers to live as they should.

"We must remember that the schoolboy of today will be the citizen of tomorrow, and may be called upon to become rulers and business men of the future. It is for our own protection and for the protection of the State and country, if for nothing else, that we give them a good education fitting them for whatever situation in life they may be called upon to fill, thus we must give them the best teachers and instructors possible and to secure instructors, we must pay them fair salaries.

"A glance over the various reports of the Board of Education and their records, will show many prominent men, who have graduated from our Plainfield High School. To name those who live among us, whom you all know, there is the Hon. E. R. Ackerman, State Senator; W. N. Runyon, our city judge; Craig A. Marsh, our corporation counsel, and one of the most prominent lawyers in the State; W. M. Stillman, R. A. Meeker, supervisor of roads, and many others to numerous to mention.

"Our High School has the reputation whereby a college that will admit on certificate, will accept a certificate of our superintendent. The school has the record of having taken the prize for the best college examination. We are turning out business men and women ready to take immedate positions, and we have cause to feel proud of our school and congratulate those who have charge of them, and commend our principal and his corps of teachers for their very good and efficient work."

At the conclusion of Mr. Fisk's address, the children sang a medley of patriotic airs, which aroused the feelings of the audience to such an extent that there was frequent interruption by applause.

President Lovell, in thanking the citizens for their united support in maintaining the high standard of education in this city, took occasion to remark that the State wisely demands much in the erection of school buildings and providing means for an education. He said that a certain amount of light is demanded in each building and the health of every child must be safeguarded.

In calling attention to the tax rate this year, Mr. Lovell explained that the highest single item represents the tax for the education of children. He also said that the State renders much financial help. There are 200 more children in the schools this year than last. This, Mr. Lovell said, was due in no small measure to the new families moving to this city, who increase the ratables and help to maintain the high characters and standing of the school system, lights, streets. Mr. Lovell did not believe that anyone would be willing to demand that less salary be paid to the teachers. They are deserving of all they receive. Mr. Lovell then thanked one and all for their support.

The exercises were concluded with the singing of several songs by the children. Both before and after the exercises hundreds of people inspected the new building and admired the construction and its every convenience. The building has twelve class rooms, a large assembly room, a retiring room for the teachers, a manual training department, ample toilet accommodations and well-appointed offices for the principal, Miss Millicent Humpstone. The rooms are all large, airy, well lighted, and the hallways are spacious. Nothing that would tend to the convenience of teacher and pupil has been omitted.

GAVE SURPRISE PARTY FOR SAMUEL SUTTON.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cartwright, of Jackson avenue,and the members of the Plainfield Association Football Club, gave a surprise party Saturday evening in honor of Samuel Sutton, of the West End. The affair was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Cartwright. Mr. Sutton was more than surprised when over seventy of his friends marched in on him. George Gray acted as chairman and a lengthy program was contributed to by Mrs. R. Baillie, Mrs. A. Anderson, Mrs. John Cartwright and Mrs. J. Fanton.

Mrs. Burns, of South avenue, rendered several fine piano selections as did also Master John Cartwright, Jr. There were also songs by Messrs. Fanton, Henderson, Spalding, Campbell, Stevenson, Craig, Strachan, Law, Gould Anderson, Kay, Wilson, Cross, Donaldson and Jamieson. Mr. Sutton was the accompanist. The guests enjoyed several dances and at midnight supper was served.

TO CLEANSE MUSLIN DRESSES

With Proper Precautions the Most Delicate Colors Will Not Be Injured.

Muslin dresses, even of the most delicate colors, can be cleaned in 10 or 15 minutes without losing their color. Melt half a pound of soap in a gallon of water, empty it in a wash tub, place near two other tubs of clean water, and stir into one a quart of bran. Put the muslin in the soap, turn it over, and knead it for a few minutes; squeeze it out well, but do not wring it; rinse quickly about the bran for a couple of minutes, rinse again in the clean water, squeeze out dry, and hang between two lines. A clear, dry day should be chosen. Half a dozen dresses may be done this way in half an hour. Note that a colored pattern on a white ground must not be blued.

When the dress is dry, make the starch—for a colored muslin white muslin starch, and unboiled, but made with boiling water. Dip the dress, hang it again to dry, and when dry, rinse it quickly in clear water. Hang it to dry again, sprinkle and roll it up, and afterward iron it with very hot irons. This rinsing after starching is called clear-starching; none of the stiffness, but much of the unsightliness of the starch is removed in this way.

PEPPER HASH HIGHLY PRAISED

Recipe Sent in to New York Newspaper Seems to Be Worth Trying.

I have walked with angels into culinary celestial regions through the kindness of "E. H. C." and the Sun; have catered to an appreciative family, who have also, by following the admirable recipe of "Connoisseur," "loosened their belts and devoured." So great, indeed, is my obligation to your columns for all these delectable pleasures that I would fain show my deep appreciation by sending a recipe for "pepper hash" the like of which never has and never will be seen "on top side of this green airth," as the natives say hereabout.

On peck green tomatoes, three small heads of hard white cabbage, 18 large green peppers, two large red peppers, two bunches of celery; chop all fine and put in salted layers overnight. To one gallon vinegar add one teaspoonful cinnamon, ground; one teaspoonful black pepper, ground; one teaspoonful cloves, ground; one teaspoonful cayenne pepper, ground; one pound sugar. Put in kettle, heat through, mix in other ingredients and boil ten minutes. Will fill three gallon crock. A piece of alum, size of a pea, will insure keeping in warm flat.—New York Sun.

BERRY FLUFF.

Half a glassful of crushed berries sweetened and piled with whip cream.

Salted Almond Sandwiches.

Heat one-fourth of a cupful of best olive oil in a frying pan, add four ounces of blanched almonds and fry a pale brown color. Drain on paper, then toss them in a seasoning of salt, red pepper and paprika mixed together. Dry in the oven, taking care that they do not become parched. Chop finely and sprinkle on to buttered bread, cover with another buttered slice, and cut in fancy shapes. These will be found to be both novel and delicious.

Apple and Nut Salad.

Peel several sour apples, cut into bits and chop in the chopping bowl. To these add less the quantity of English walnuts chopped, then add the same amount of celery, half a teaspoonful of mustard; break the yolks of two eggs and stir in one direction until the eggs are cooked by the mustard; beat in drop by drop as much olive oil as it will take, and then vinegar in the same way. Pepper and salt to suit the taste.

Baked Mackerel.

Two small mackerel, filleted. Cut each fillet in two pieces and put in a fireproof dish which has been buttered. Dust with pepper and salt and sprinkle with a little lemon juice. Cover with buttered paper and bake in a moderate oven for 15 minutes. Serve plain or with parsley sauce poured over.

Simple Recipe.

Two eggs beaten light, one cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of sour cream; fill cup with buttermilk, one level teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of baking powder, a pinch of salt, flour to roll out. Fry and roll in fine sugar before putting on the table.

Fried Potato Balls.

Use a potato scoop to make the balls; to use the scoop press it well into the potatoes after they are pared; turn around and a ball is the result. Fry these in deep, smoking hot fat, using a basket. Salt before using.

Baked Bean Pie.

One cup left-over baked beans pressed through a sieve, one egg well beaten, half cup of sugar, a little salt and cinnamon and enough sweet milk to fill one pie. Bake with one crust like squash.

TOO GOOD FOR THIS SPHERE.

"When it comes to ideal domestic women," said the proud young author, "the heroine of my new novel is the paragon."

"That's just the kind of heroine we're looking for," replied the busy publisher.

"Yes, sir, she is a woman you don't meet every day. In the first place, she never leans out of the back windows and criticises her neighbors' Monday wash."

"She must be perfect."

"Nor does she hang over the back fence gossiping by the hour while the dinner scorches."

"I'd like to meet one like her."

"When new neighbors move in she does not criticise their old furniture and wonder if they have paid for their new."

The busy publisher held up his hand.

"Stop! That could not be a woman."

"Not a woman?"

"No; that would be an angel."

STRENUOUS, INDEED.

Victim (in Turkish bath)—Great heavens, man! You are nearly rubbing the skin off me. I don't believe you ever had any experience as a rubber.

Employe—Yes, I have, sir. I used to work in a livery stable and rub down horses.

Ready Relief.

Baby whimpered for a drink;
Willie filled her up with ink.
Mamma, laughing at the lad,
Fed the babe with blotting pad.

A Growing Nuisance.

The lawyer on the thirty-ninth floor of the Hightower skyscraper was busy with a brief.

Suddenly smash, crash, whirr, bang!

The office boy ran to the shattered window. The lawyer whirled about in his chair.

"What in blazes was that, Jimmie?"

The boy looked around.

"A b'loon driver's drag rope smashed the glass, sir. I couldn't quite see his number."

"Confound 'em! When they're not choking up chimneys and pulling off cornices they're smashing windows. Call up the sky police."

Down in Frog Hollow.

"Could I have a glass of ice water?" asked the weary broom peddler as he climbed up to the editorial rooms of the Frog Hollow Enterprise.

"You could not" drawled the editor as he lighted his traditional corncob.

"And why not?"

"Wall, because thar don't happen to be any ice water here. Last week I read that ice water stopped the circulation and I ain't running any chances."

Caught on the Rebound.

"There is a ring around the moon to-night," remarked the young man in the porch rocker. "Do you know what that means?"

"No," replied the fair occupant of the hammock, "but I know what a ring around a girl's finger means."

And as there was only one way out of it, the young man went out that way—and bought the ring.

NO KICK.

Mrs. Meek—Do you approve of my new bathing suit, Edgar?

Mr. Meek—Sure, it doesn't button up the back.

Guyer—No, indeed. Every minute the girls are posing and the young men proposing.

Why Indeed.

"Priests do not believe in divorce, do they?"

"Why should they, they are not married?"

Had a Chance to Learn.

"Does he understand double entry bookkeeping?"

"I imagine so. He formerly worked in a bank controlled by one of our eminent speculators."

IX. — The Friends That Stick

"BUT, you see, papa," protested young Mrs Rollins, "we've got to keep up appearances. I don't think people are like they were when you were young. You must make a show nowadays if you're going to stay in society. As Will says, if we don't trail along with the procession we'll get left at the post. I'm not sure that that's exactly the way he put it, but I know he means that if we didn't do as our friends do we wouldn't have any friends."

"Uh, huh," grunted the colonel. "It's a sort of an up to date version of the Golden Rule—splurge for others if you want others to splurge for you. I've got no particular quarrel with that if you can afford it. It helps to make business good. But I don't think you can afford it. Moreover, it don't make friends and it don't keep friends. Moreover, again, there ain't a bit of difference between the world now and when I was a boy, or when Julius Caesar was a boy, for that matter. It's always been that way, and I reckon it always will be that way. It's been a continuous procession from Adam's time down, and there's always been a lot of people fallin' over one another tryin' to keep the head of it in sight.

"WOULDN'T TAKE THE TROUBLE."

"But there's a whole lot more, a great many more, now as well as then, who don't care a continental rap about keepin' up with the procession; most of 'em don't even know that there is a procession; and if they did they wouldn't take the trouble to go to the window to see it pass by, much less trail on behind the band wagon, for, honestly now, honey, what's the use? Does the procession ever get anywhere or do anything? Not on your life. It just prances around in a circle and blows its horn. It puts on a lot of style, to be sure, and it looks mighty gay with its ribbons and its feathers flyin', but the people that's on the outside watchin' it get more entertainment out of it than the ones takin' part in it."

"But what else are we to do, papa?" interrupted his daughter. "You don't want us to stay at home all the time and wear our old clothes, do you?"

"No, sir-ee, little girl, and you know I don't. I want you to wear just as pretty dresses as you can afford and have all the fun that's comin' to you, but don't do things you've got no business to do just because other people do them, and don't imagine that you'll lose any friends if the procession gets away from you. Maybe some of the people you call your friends would get somethin' the matter with their eyes when you came along the street if you didn't put on as much style as they did, but that kind of cattle ain't the stuff that friends are made of. There's nothin' finer or sweeter in the world than a good friend, and the man or the woman that hasn't got real friends is mighty unfortunate, but you can't get 'em and you can't keep 'em by makin' a show, as you call it. Just try it by your own standard, for instance. Take the women that you like the best. Why do you like them? Is it because they wear fine clothes or live in big houses or give swell parties that you like them? No; you bet it ain't. It's because there's somethin' within them that's better than any show they could make if they had millions. And don't you suppose the same women love you for the same reason? Don't you suppose it's your character and not your dress that draws them to you? I'm mighty sure it is, and I'm also mighty sure that they'd keep on lovin' you, no matter whether you had your gowns made in Paris or by the little dressmaker around the corner. If they didn't, why, they wouldn't be friends. That's all there is to that They'd just be make believes, and if you lost 'em you wouldn't lose anything worth grievin' about.

"What I'm tryin' to get into your pretty little noggin—and, by the way, honey, I like that new way of fixin' your hair; it's mighty becomin'—but, as I was about to remark, the point I'm tryin' to get you to see is that fine feathers don't make fine friends, and you'll make a mighty big mistake if you think the only friends worth havin' are the ones that wear the gayest raiment. You will find good, true friends, no doubt, in swell garb, but it ain't the clothes that make them so, for real friendship has nothin' to do with dress or position in life. It springs from qualities of the mind or the heart, which don't cost a red cent and which millions can't buy.

MILLIONS CAN'T BUY IT.

"You can't have too many friends, my dear, but you've got to depend upon somethin' besides appearances to get them and to keep them. The friends that stick are the ones that love you for what you are, not for what you wear, and you'll find material for friends of that kind among the high and the low, the rich and the poor. Some of the best friends I've got don't know where the next dollar's to come from, and some of the others don't know what to do with their money, but they're all in the same boat in the matter of friendship, and any one of them would go through fire and water for me. I know, because I've tried them.

"But you can't make friends without doin' somethin' or bein' somethin' worthy of friendship, and you can't keep friends unless you give as much as you take—not in money, understand, but in friendly words and friendly deeds, in a little sympathy or a little help when it's needed, and particularly when it's badly needed. One friend that sticks, no matter what comes, whether you lead the procession or are trampled under its feet, is worth more than a thousand of those that pat you on the back when you're in the swim and forget you're on earth when trouble comes. When you've got friends you can count on, no matter what happens, you ought to hang on to 'em with a death grip, for there's nothin' more precious on earth except a good wife or a good husband and children. But you needn't be afraid of losin' 'em by fallin' to keep up appearances. The real ones, little girl, ain't lost in that way."

"LOVE YOU FOR WHAT YOU ARE."

Mind's Mastery Over Matter.

Striking instances of the mastery of mind over matter are seen almost every day in dining cars. Not only are they seen, but they are experienced.

Frequently I go into a diner thinking: "Well, I'm feeling pretty tolerably punk, I tell you. I'm fairly puny this morning. Maybe I can worry down as much as a little bit of buttered toast and two soft boiled eggs."

I think this because I have been counting on an a la carte breakfast.

But when I get into the car and sit down at the table and observe that the meal is table d'hote—well! That's different. I'm feeling better, thanks. That cantaloupe sounds good, also the breakfast food. Salt mackerel doesn't listen so bad to a man who hasn't had a single morsel of food between supper and breakfast. What's the matter with that sirloin, with a couple of rashers of bacon, a cheese omelet, some French fried potatoes, a few more of those hot rolls, please, and some wheat cakes with maple sirup and a pot of coffee?

Yes, that's the way it works—the whole program from soup to nuts, and you don't feel particularly well fed even then.

Then sometimes it works out in the following manner:

(Before you have investigated.)
Come, feed with me, my gentle friend,
While the covered coaches fly.
Let's seek the car at yonder end
Of the choo-choos, you and I.
We'll down the doughty tenderloin,
We'll worry the Boston bean,
For only a paltry bit of coin.
Oh, shame on the man that's mean!
Come, take with me a bit of cheer,
Thou loved of my inmost heart,
For the dining car's in the rear,
My dear,
And the service is a la carte.

(After investigation.)
Nay; not today, my time tried friend,
For my tummy hurts me so.
The food van's on the hindmost end.
'Tis quite too far to go.
The things they serve on railroad trains
Are never the food for mine.
I dare not take a chance on pains
With viands too rich and fine.
Let's fast and be of chastened cheer,
Nor vulgarly play the goat.
Though the dining car's in the rear,
My dear,
The service is table d'hote,
I note—
The service is table d'hote.

It All Depends.

"Not much of the pace that kills about this slow town, is there?"

"Yes; the pace that would kill a nervous person who had to stay here."

INDOOR GOLF SCHOOL TO OPEN TOMORROW

The indoor golf school which will be opened for winter play and practice by "Marty" O'Loughlin in the Marsh building, tomorrow, is almost ready. The large net with its pockets of various sizes are arranged in a manner to give due credit to a well hit ball and also punish a ball that has been topped, pulled or sliced, has arrived and will soon be put in position.

The green carpet putting greens will also be completed soon. A device for practicing short approach shots, one of the most difficult strokes of the royal and ancient game has also been secured. The large room where the school will be established has been put in first-class condition. One of Plainfield's most prominent golfers says that he can see no reason why all those who use the school and take instruction from the professional engaged to assist "Marty" and also instruction from the latter himself, should not improve their game considerably by the time spring comes around and regular play is resumed.

Every up-to-date idea for improving one's game has been adopted. Now that the regular links are covered with a blanket of snow and play over them is almost impossible, golfers are anxiously awaiting the opportunity to continue their play and practice indoors.

Any course in this country, from Maine to California, Montreal to Florida, or in fact any course in the world can be played over in "Marty's" school, provided a score card of the links selected is at hand to give the distances of the different holes. The regular rules of the United States Golf Association govern the indoor play. The following key is used in connection with the large net:

Pocket one represents a perfect shot with any club, number two a well hit shot, but not as good as the one which had the high altitude, number three a half-topped ball, number four a well hit ball sliced, number five a well hit ball pulled, number six a sliced topped ball, number seven a pulled topped ball. A ball sliced or pulled outside of the pockets is considered a ball "out of bounds."

Charles L. Force, of Mountain avenue, left yesterday for South Bend, Ind., to visit his sister.

BASKETBALL.

The first basketball game of the season will be played tomorrow afternoon at the Plainfield High School gymnasium with the Hasbrouck High School five. The local players have been practicing much of late and are in fine condition. The game will be called at 3 o'clock. The game scheduled with High School of Commerce for this afternoon has been cancelled by the New York five.

MUSICALE AS BENEFIT FOR AFFLICTED WOMAN

The musicale given in the Sunday-school room of the First Presbyterian church last night for the benefit of Mrs. Wm. Jones, of Brooklyn, a former member, who has become blind, was a decided success from every viewpoint. Mrs. S. P. T. Wilbur, who made the arrangements for the entertainment, appreciates everything that was done to further the project, particularly the free use of the Sunday-school room which was offered by the church after arrangements for other places had fallen through. The affair financially was more than pleasing, upward of $125 having been realized for Mrs. Jones.

The talent, which was all voluntary, was of a distinctly high order, particularly the magnificent piano playing by Miss Florence Nicholl. Miss Nichol's interpretation of MacDowell's "Landing of the Pilgrims" was a remarkably clear and technically correct translation and won for her an ovation. Judge William N. Runyon was there with some comic songs which brought down the house.

Solos by Townsend H. Fellows as usual brought out the beauties of this singer's voice and mikhtily pleased the audience. Miss Justine Roberts was specially pleasing in her elocution. One of her own compositions, "New York Shop Girl," being inimitable. In "Rosa" she was admirable. Taken altogether the musicale was decidedly good and the large audience enjoyed every minute of it.

JOHN GIDDES DEAD IN EIGHTY-FOURTH YEAR.

John Giddes, a former well-known boroughite, died yesterday at Newark, from old age. He was eighty-three years of age and was a veteran of the Civil War. Up to four weeks ago he resided on Grove street with his son, Samuel Giddes.

For years Mr. Giddes lived on upper Duer street and was always a familiar figure as was known to his intimate friends and old residents as "Uncle John." About two months ago he disposed of his property in the borough to Assessor Cooley, and later removed to Newark.

Red Cross Stamps on Sale.

The Plainfield Society for the Relief and Prevention of Tuberculosis in its efforts to secure funds for its war upon consumption has placed with the merchants of the city a large quantity of Red Cross stamps and postal cards, and the people are urged to buy and use them in sending customary greetings of the season. Eighty per cent. of the proceeds will go to the local society, the balance going to the National Red Cross Association.

NEW SCHOOL PHYSICIAN

Dr. A. H. Dundon Chosen by North Plainfield's Board of Education.

HE SUCCEEDS DR. HUGHES.

Public School Singing Contest Approved and Representative Is Appointed.

Plans of Supervisor of Music Alfred Lloyd for the proposed singing competition for public school children on April 19, 1910, were approved by the Borough School Board at its regular monthly meeting last night. The songfest will be held in this city or at Elizabeth on the date named and pupils in Union county, Newark, Somerville and North Plainfield will be eligible to enter the contest.

Nelson D. Miller was appointed by President James R. Joy as the representative from the Borough Board to serve on the general advisory committee. In addition to Mr. Nelson, Mr. Joy will select another member who will represent the citizens. Men prominent in the musical world will be selected to officiate as judges of the competition. The prizes will be mounted silver and bronze shields for the winning schools.

The resignation of Dr. Frederic J. Hughes as school physician was received and accepted with regret. Dr. A. H. Dundon, secretary of the Borough Board of Health, was selected as his successor. Dr. Hughes' resignation, it is understood, was due to the increased labors which will devolve on him, when he assumes charges of the tuberculosis pavilion at Muhlenberg Hospital.

A communication was read from C. J. Baxter, State superintendent of schools, approving the rules on medical instruction adopted by the borough school.

By a unanimous vote Drs. Frank W. French and Raymond E. Stevens were appointed dental examiners for the school. It was also decided to purchase an industrial and commercial exhibit for use in the school for $106.

Bills amounting to $4,545.43 were ordered paid and District Clerk Steiner was authorized to borrow $4,500, in anticipation of taxes to meet the indebtedness.

The Board also held an executive session at which the newspaper representatives were excluded. At this secret conclave the resignation of a school teacher and two truancy cases were discussed.

BLIND MUSICIAN MAKES AN ADDRESS TO P. H. S. PUPILS.

G. G. Odwyer, of Philadelphia, a blind lecturer and musician, gave a fine address to the pupils of the Plainfield High School this morning. The main thought of his talk was that the eyes are only a minor organ of the body and people know very little of how to see things.

The speaker referred to Helen Keller, who is both deaf and blind, as one of the most intellectual women in the world. He also referred to the blind as having only the memory to rely on at school, while the people with sight could copy things down and often refer to them. At the close of his talk, Mr. Odwyer played and whistled several compositions of his own.

Sails For His Fortune.

Salvadora Delecio, a nineteen year old Italian boy, who has been in the employ of Debele and Stahl, of Somerset street, for nearly two years, has resigned his position, and purchased transportation on the steamer Reginia Italiana, on which he will sail Wednesdaly, December 7, for his old home at Luparu, in eastern Italy, to visit his parents, and incidentally collect money which was recently bequeathed to him by a rich uncle.

Annual Union Praise Service.

The annual union praise meeting of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church will be held in the church parlors Friday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. There will be an address by Rev. Edgar W. Work, minister of the Fourth Presbyterian church, New York city. He was formerly minister of the Central Presbyterian church in Colorado Springs.

Sale and Tea at Church Rectory.

A sale and tea will be held at the rectory of the Church of the Holy Cross tomorrow afternoon from 2 to 6 o'clock. The rector and his wife will receive. There will be a sale of useful articles suitable for Christmas, candy and preserves. A silver offering will be received at the door. The proceeds will be divided between the piano fund and the missionary apportionment.

Drilling Fire Horses.

Chief Howard Woolston and Lieutenant Gaub, of the borough fire department, spent last evening drilling the horses to take their positions in harness as soon as the first tap of the alarm sounds. The drill was entirely successful and was witnessed by a number of boroughites who were attracted to the house by the constant clanging of the inside gongs.
